

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

March 1864

Robert Snow.

100

CB
C. B. Myers

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND, AS WELL
Ecclesiastical as Civil.

BY
M^r. DE RAPIN THOYRAS.

VOL. V.

CONTAINING

I. The Reigns of the Three KINGS of the House of Lancaster, HENRY IV, HENRY V, and HENRY VI.

II. A DISSERTATION on the Maid of Orleans.

Done into ENGLISH from the FRENCH, with large and useful NOTES mark'd with an *, by N. TINDAL, A. M. Vicar of Great Waltham in Essex.

Illustrated with the Heads of the KINGS, curiously engrav'd on Copper-Plates, by Mr. Vertue.

LONDON, Printed for JAMES and JOHN KNAPTON at the Crown in St. Paul's Church-Yard. 1728.

23270

Perthes sculp.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND.

BOOK XI.

The Reigns of HENRY IV, and HENRY V. containing the Space of Twenty-two Years and Ten Months.

SECT. I.

13. HENRY IV, Sirnamed of BULLINGBROKE.

HENRY Duke of Lancaster, sirnamed of Bullingbroke the Place of his Birth, having been proclaimed the 30th of Septem- ber, took that very Day the Reins of the Government. As the Parliament then assembled had been called in Richard's Name, and as their Authority ceased upon his being deposed, Henry's first Care was to call another.

On his being deposed, Henry's first Care was to call another.

1399.
HENRY IV. continues the same Paraliament called by Richard.

1399. ther. To proceed according to Custom, the Representatives must have been chosen anew. But Henry did not think fit to run the Risk of having a Parliament less favourable than that which had so heartily espoused his Cause. He was contented, therefore, with empowering the same Representatives to make, with the House of Lords, a new Parliament under his Authority. I shall not take upon me to decide whether this Proceeding was not somewhat irregular, or whether it was authorised by any former Precedent. Be this as it will, after a few Days Interruption, the same Parliament met again on the 6th of October, as if it had been called by the new King.

The Earl of March retires to Wigmore.

Mean Time Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, considering that it would be no less dangerous than fruitless, at such a Juncture, to assert his just Right to the Crown, retired to his Lordship of Wigmore, near the Borders of Wales. The more incontestable his Claim was, the more Reason he had to dread the new King's Jealousy. So that giving way to the Torrent which he could not stem, he resolved to live in Retirement, without showing the least Signs of Ambition, or the least Uneasiness at the Injustice done him. He had no other way left to secure his Quiet, and even his Life, against the Suspicions of a Prince whose Interest it was to destroy him. There was but too great Probability that the new King would lay hold on the first Occasion that offered, to free himself from the Uneasiness which such a Rival might create in him.

The Archbishop harangues the Parliament in Praise of the new King.

The Parliament being assembled, in the manner above mentioned, Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury made a long Speech tending to inspire a high Opinion of the Advantages which the late Revolution was to procure the Kingdom. He enlarged chiefly on the Irregularities of the late Reign, and assured, that the new Sovereign proposed to govern after a very different manner, and to preserve to All their Rights and Liberties. This Prelate had been banished the Realm in the late Reign, and Roger Walden, who had been appointed in his Room, had acted hitherto as Archbishop. But as Arundel had not been canonically deposed, the Parliament in their first Session had ordered dered that he should resume his Dignity, especially as the other had not yet obtained the Pope's Confirmation. The Archbishop's Speech, and some preliminary Formalities, were the only Things remarkable in the first Session of the new Parliament, which was adjourned to the 14th of October. This Adjournment was necessary in order to prepare for the Coronation, which was to be on the 13th. 1399.

During this Interval the King filled several Posts, which were either vacant, or possessed by Persons he did not like. Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland, and Ralph Nevil Earl of Westmoreland, had given too great Marks of their Zeal for the King, by joining him at Ravenſpur presently after his Landing, not to have a share in his Favours. Henry willing to show his Gratitude, conferred on the First the Office of High Conſtable, and on the other that of Earl-Marſhal. A few Days after he gave a Grant to the Earl of Northumberland of the Iſle of Man, ſituated between Scotland and Ireland, with the Privilege of carrying at the Coronation, the Sword called Lancaſter, on the King's left Hand *. This was the ſame Sword the King had on when he landed at Ravenſpur. The King fills the vacant Poſts; rewards the Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmoreland. Aet. Pub. VIII. 89, 90, 95.

After Henry had thus requited the Obligations he lay under to theſe two Lords, whom he looked upon as the firmeſt Friends to his Inter-eſt and Perſon, he made Thomas of Lancaſter his ſecond Son High-Steward. It was abſolutely neceſſary to fill this Poſt before the Coronation, becauſe to the High-Steward's Court all muſt apply who have any Service to do in that Ceremony, in order to be maintained in their Rights. But as the Prince was but ten Years old, the King gave him for Deputy Thomas Percy Earl of Worceſter, Brother to the Earl of Northumberland. Thomas his ſecond Son made High-Steward. ibid.

On the 13th of October, Edward the Confeſſor's Day, Henry was crowned with all the uſual Formalities, being then thirty three Years of Age. He was anointed with a certain Oil which was pretended to be brought by the Bleſſed Virgin to St. Thomas of Canterbury whiſt he was in France. The Vial which held this precious Oil was fallen The King is crowned and anointed with an extraordinary Oil.

* He was to hold the Iſle of Man by that Office.

1399. into the Hands of an Hermite who presented it to Henry Duke of Lancaster Grandson of Henry III, with this Prophecy, That the Kings which should be anointed with that sacred Oil, should be true Champions of the Church. The Duke of Lancaster gave it afterwards to the famous Prince of Wales, Son of Edward III, who was resolved to be anointed with it when he should be crowned. After the Death of that Prince, the Vial which was of Stone, having on the Top a Gold-Eagle set with Diamonds, was laid up among the Jewels without any one's minding it. Richard II his Son having found it some time before his last Voyage to Ireland, designed to be crowned again on purpose to be anointed with the Holy Oil in the Vial. But the Archbishop of Canterbury opposed it, by representing to him that the Unction of Kings ought not to be repeated. At length the Vial was come to the Hands of Henry, who either out of Devotion, or because it came from the Duke of Lancaster his Grandfather by the Mother's Side, was pleased to be anointed with it at his Coronation. But if we examine the Reigns of that Prince, and several of his Successors who were anointed with the same Oil, we shall not find that the good Hermite's Prophecy was ever accomplished.

Henry refuses to own he holds the Crown of the People.

I have already remarked, in the Reign of Richard II, that when, after the deposing of that Prince, Henry claimed the Crown, he affected to make use of obscure Expressions. His Aim was to make the People believe, that there was some Foundation in the Right he pretended to derive from the old House of Lancaster, of which he was Heir by his Mother. But this Pretext which might then have some Effect upon such as were willing to shut their Eyes, was too gross to deceive any longer. It was therefore necessary for the new King to find out some plausible Title which might justify the Nation's Choice of him. There was none more lawful than the Service he had lately done the State. But he judged it dangerous to build his Right upon such a Foundation. When the Business was to receive the Crown, he was very willing to own the Parliament's Power to confer it on him. But when once it was placed placed on his Head, he was afraid that from that Principle it would be inferred, that they who had given him the Crown, had a Power to take it away. So that he was on this Occasion at a great Loss. It was requisite that the People should be satisfied that the Parliament had lawfully deposed Richard, and that their Authority was superiour to the King's. On the other Hand, there was a Necessity of letting them know, that in placing Henry on the Throne, the very same Parliament had not acted by way of Authority, and that they could not dispense with owning him for King. In a Word, there was occasion to acknowledge in the Parliament an unlimited Power with respect to Richard's Deposing, and to decline their Authority in the late Election. These two Things seemed inconsistent. But when a Man has Power on his Side, he does not trouble himself so much about finding good Reasons, as about blinding the Eyes of the Publick with Appearances. Henry, perswaded that at this Juncture, no one would have the Boldness to contradict him, resolved to let his Subjects know that he did not intend to derive his Right from their bare Consent. On his Coronation-Day he published a Proclamation, declaring that he had mounted the Throne, First, By Right of Conquest: Secondly, By Virtue of Richard's Resignation to him, and his having appointed him for Successor: Lastly, as he was the next Male-Heir of the late King. By this means he excluded the only lawful Title he had, namely, the general Consent of the People, in order to build his Claim upon three Foundations, the Weakness of which was visible to all. In the first Place, how could he pretend to a Right of Conquest? He entered the Kingdom but with fourscore Men, who in all Appearance were for the most Part English. Besides his having so good Success was entirely owing to the Concurrency of all England, and consequently he could not say he had conquered the Kingdom. In the next Place, it was not true that Richard had resigned the Crown to him. We took notice in the Reign of that Prince, that Henry himself as well as his Friends did not think it proper. He was only obliged to make an absolute Resignation, least it should appear

The King's Proclamation to show his Title to the Crown.

1399. appear too much constrained, in Case he did it in favour of a Prince to whom he was then actually a Prisoner. Moreover, supposing Richard had appointed Henry for his Successor, how could a King, deposed on the Score of Tyranny and Inability, be allowed a Right to chuse the Person who should succeed him, especially as the Nomination was contrary to the Laws of the Land. Lastly, It was still less true that Henry was the next Heir of Richard, unless the Salick-Law had taken Place in England as well as in France, and the Descendants of the Women were debarred the Succession. It is true indeed, that in the third Title alledged by the King, there was a Sort of Equivocation capable of deceiving. He was Cousin-German of the late King, and consequently a nearer Relation than the Earl of March, who was one Degree farther removed. But it did not follow by any means that he was the next Heir, since with respect to the Succession, it was to the lineal Descent that Regard was to be had, and not to the nearest of Kin. Thus after the Death of Edward III it was Richard his Grandson that succeeded him, though he was one Degree farther removed than his Uncles. Again, supposing that this Rule had not been inviolably kept to, Henry could not say he was the nearest Relation of Richard. He was first Cousin: But the Duke of York who was Uncle, had no less Right than he. So that on which side soever they viewed the pretended Title of Henry, it could not but appear ill-grounded. The only Claim he could have produced with any Colour, was the Consent of the People. But he would not make use of that for the Reasons above-mentioned.

Act. Pub.
VIII. 91.

The same Day the King issued his Proclamation, he created Henry his eldest Son, aged thirteen Years, Duke of Cornwall, Prince of Wales, and Earl of Chester. But he added not to these Titles that of Duke of Aquitain, as some pretend.

The Parliament
meets.

The Solemnity of the Coronation being over, the Parliament met next Day being the 14th of October. The Importance of the Acts which were passed this Session, obliges me to give a particular Account of them, it being absolutely necessary for the Sequel of this History.

In

In the first Place, was passed an Act of Indemnity, to screen those who during the late Troubles had taken up Arms in Defence of the King, then Duke of Lancaster. This Act was absolutely necessary, since the Laws condemned without Distinction those that opposed the Government established, the which was precisely the Case of such as had assisted the King, and of the King himself.

1399.
Acts of Parliaments

After this Act was passed, the Parliament examined whatever had been done in the late Reign, to stretch the Prerogative-Royal beyond its due Bounds. They applied themselves chiefly to the Proceedings of the Parliament begun at Westminster in 1397, and continued on at Shrewsbury in 1398. All the Acts passed, as well with regard to the three Lords unjustly condemned, as to the exorbitant Privileges granted to the King, being so manifestly destructive of the Nation's Liberties, were unanimously repealed. At the same Time were revived and confirmed the Statutes of the Parliament of 1388, which the Shrewsbury Parliament had annulled. It was thought likewise absolutely necessary to pass a particular Act against the Pope's Bull which ratified the Statutes of Shrewsbury. This Bull, whereby Richard II pretended to give the greater Force to Acts of Parliament, was founded on a Principle too opposite to the Rights of the People to be suffered to subsist. And indeed the Pope's Power to confirm Acts of Parliament could not be acknowledged, without ascribing to him a Right of Sovereignty upon England. For this Reason the Parliament declared in the Act, that the Kingdom of England was independent of all Foreign Powers, particularly of the Court of Rome, and that the Pope had no Right to interpose in the Civil Government of the Realm.

The Parliament examines the Proceedings of the former one.

The Shrewsbury Parliament having designed to extend the Royal Authority as much as possible, had in such a manner multiplied the Cases of High-Treason, that none, but such as acknowledged in the Sovereign an unlimited Power, could possibly avoid incurring the Guilt of Treason. To redress so dangerous a Grievance, which tended to the making the King absolute Master of the Lives and Fortunes of his Subjects, the Parliament revived a Statute, made to that Purpose

Purpose in the Reign of Edward III, and confined treasonable Offences to the Articles mentioned in that Act.

Richard's Advisers and Favourites are inquired after.

After the Rights and Privileges of the People were, by these Acts, put upon the same Foot they stood before the Incroachments of Richard, the Authors and Advisers of these Usurpations were inquired after. When King Richard apprehended the Duke of Gloucester, and the Earls of Warwick and Arundel, he was not invested with that absolute Power, which the Shrewsbury Parliament so liberally conferred upon him afterwards: So that he saw himself obliged to proceed according to Law, in order to get these three Lords condemned. To that End he ordered it so, that John Holland Earl of Huntington, his Half-Brother; Thomas Holland Earl of Kent, his Nephew; Edward Earl of Albemarle, his Cousin, Son of the Duke of York; John Beaufort Earl of Somerset, Son of the Duke of Lancaster by his third Wife; and the Lord Thomas Spencer were the Accusers of the three imprisoned Lords. The Earl of Salisbury, and the Lord Morley, were reported to be the chief Contrivers of this Plot. After Condemnation, Richard distributed the Estates of the three Lords among the Managers and Evidences. Moreover, he made the Earl of Albemarle a Duke; and conferred the Title of Duke of Exeter on the Earl of Huntington; of Duke of Surrey on the Earl of Kent; of Duke of Somerset on the Earl of Somerset; of Earl of Gloucester on Thomas Spencer.

As it was publickly known that the three Lords had been unjustly oppressed by the late King; the Parliament thought it necessary to punish the Authors and Instruments of their Ruin. To that Purpose, after having reversed the Sentence against the Earls of Arundel and Warwick as directly contrary to the Pardon which had been granted them, it was resolved that the Managers should be deprived both of their Titles, and of the Estates distributed among them. As to their own Lands, it was left to the King's Breast either to continue them in Possession, or to turn them out as he thought fit. Henry, willing to show his Clemency in the Beginning of his Reign, not only left them their Estates, 1399.

Estates, but likewise restored them to the Honours they had been deprived of. Moreover, he made the Duke of Exeter, his Half-Brother, Governour of Calais. The Earl of Salisbury and the Lord Morley, the hated Ministers of Richard, and principal Authors of the Oppression practised upon the Duke of Gloucester and the other two Lords, came off with a short Imprisonment, though the People loudly called for their Deaths. As the Friends of these Lords had alledged in their Excuse, that Richard had compelled them to act, the Parliament took occasion from thence to pass an Act, whereby it was enacted, That for the future, Compulsion should be no legal Excuse to justify Actions contrary to Law.

This Affair being over, the Parliament prevailed with the King to grant a general Pardon, in which however were excepted the Murderers of the Duke of Gloucester. One of the Villains being apprehended and convicted was hanged at London, and his Head sent to Calais, to be fixt on one of the Gates.

General Pardon.

Though the Injustice done to the Earl of March was manifest, yet it might in some measure be varnished over with the Pretence of rewarding Henry for the signal Service he had done the State. If this Reward had been limited to his Person, perhaps it would not have seemed very strange, that in so extraordinary a Case the Laws should be superseded in favour of a Prince who had so freely exposed himself for the sake of the Publick. But at such Junctures, it is very difficult to keep within the Bounds of Equity. The Parliament not content with having given to Henry the Crown taken from Richard, would moreover secure it to his Issue. To that End an Act was passed, settling the Succession on the House of Lancaster: First on the Person of the Prince of Wales, the King's eldest Son and his Heirs, then on his three Brothers and their Issue.

The Succession settled on the House of Lancaster.

A very important Affair still remained, about which the King was desirous to advise with his Parliament before the Houses broke up. The Commons, not satisfied with the bare deposing of Richard, after a very irregular Manner, would have him tried in Form, and had petitioned

The King asks the Parliament what is to be done with Richard.

1399. the King to that Effect. It was, therefore, to know what was to be done with Richard, that the King wanted to have the Advice of the two Houses. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who was commissioned in this Affair, having first exacted an Oath of Secrecy from all the Members, proposed the Question to them. It may well be thought that Richard had not many Friends in the House, and that if Any approved not of the Proceedings against him, they had not courage enough to venture to speak in his Defence. There was one however bold enough to say publicly what others only thought. This was Thomas Merks Bishop of Carlisle, who without regarding the Motives which might induce him, as well as the rest of Richard's Friends, to keep Silence, made a long Speech on this Subject; wherein he alledged every Thing that could with any Plausibleness be said in Behalf of the King deposed, and against the King on the Throne.

The Bishop of Carlisle's Speech in Defence of Richard.

The Bishop undertook to prove three Things. First, That there was no Authority which could lawfully depose a King of England. Secondly, That the Offences Richard was accused of, deserved not that he should be deposed, and besides, they were not proved. Thirdly, That the Crown had been unjustly adjudged to the Duke of Lancaster.

He enlarged very much on the first Head, showing the wide Difference between the several Kinds of Government established in the World. He confessed that in Some the Prince or Head might be deposed, because the supreme Authority was not lodged in his Person, but the People or Nobles had a Share in it. Of this Sort he reckoned the Republicks, the antient Government of Rome, the Empire of Germany, the Kingdoms of Swedland and Denmark, the Earldom of Flanders, and some other States. But he maintained, that it was otherwise in the Governments where the supreme Authority was in the single Person of the Sovereign. In this Class he ranked the Kingdom of Israel among the Antients, with the three first Empires; and among the Moderns, England, France, Spain, Scotland, Muscovy, Turky, Persia, and in general all the Kingdoms of of Asia and Africa. With regard to these he alledged, that notwithstanding the Vices of a Sovereign should be not only detrimental, but even intolerable to his Subjects, he could not be lawfully deposed by any Means whatever: That Force could not be made use of, without incurring the Crime of Rebellion and Treason, and much less Authority, since there was not in the State any lawful Authority but what was derived from him. He produced upon this Head, Arguments and Precedents from the Holy Scriptures and Profane Authors, which cannot be repeated without running out to too great a length.

Upon the second Article, he boldly asserted, That the Crimes for which Richard was deposed, were either false or aggravated: That indeed, he might be guilty of some Errours or Omissions, but his Faults could not to be stiled Tyranny: That if those he had committed afforded a just Occasion to depose him, we should see in the World nothing but Sovereigns treated as Tyrants, and deposed by their Subjects: That the levying a Subsidy, the condemning a Rebel, in a Word, whatever was not to the good liking of the People, would furnish a Handle to dethrone the most lawful Prince. He passed over the more slightly the Proofs of this second Head, as the Parliament it self seemed to have called in question the Truth of the Crimes alledged against Richard, seeing there had been no Step taken to prove them in a legal Manner. By the way, it is very likely that it was for fear of this Reproach, that the Commons wanted to proceed against the deposed King in Form. Upon the Third Article the Bishop maintained, that even supposing Richard guilty, and granting the Nation had Authority to depose him, there was not the least Colour of Justice to give the Crown to the Duke of Lancaster. That if the Duke was the true Heir of Richard, as he pretended, he must wait his Death before he claimed the Inheritance. But that no body was ignorant, there was a nearer Heir, whose Father had been declared Successor of Richard by Act of Parliament. As for Henry's pretended Right from Edmund Crouchback Son of Henry III, the Bishop disdained to consider it, affirming he was very certain that People of 1398. Sense were ashamed of a Right built upon so slender a Foundation.

After this the Orator went on to examine the other two Titles contained in the King's Proclamation, namely, Conquest, and Richard's Resignation. To the first he said, That a Subject could never pretend a Right of Conquest against his Sovereign, since the Victory it self was high and heinous Treason. As for the Resignation, he said it was not only extorted by Force, but that supposing it voluntary, it could be of no Validity : That in the State Richard was then in, it was not in his Power to make a valid Act : That besides, the Laws not allowing the King the Liberty of alienating the Jewels of the Crown, much more tied him up doubtless from giving away the Crown it self (a). Then he spake of the general Consent of the People, though Henry had not thought proper to insist upon it ; that the Kingdom of England having never been Elective, it was ridiculous to ascribe to the People the Power of disposing of the Crown. Lastly, he replied to the Objection which might be urged from the deposing of Edward II, That wise Men must live according to Law, and not be guided by Examples and Precedents : That however the Example of Edward II, would be of no more Force than that of a Prince poisoned or assassinated by his Subjects : But that even in deposing of Edward II, Care was taken to preserve the Rights of the lawful Successor.

What the Bishop had hitherto said, might pass for Reasons to question whether Richard II could be lawfully deposed. At most, it might be considered as the private Opinion of the Speaker. But towards the Close of his Speech, he launched out strangely against Henry, and fell into a Passion, which took off very much from the Reasons he had alledged. He said, that it was to be feared that the People of England would soon find themselves in the Case of Æsop's Frogs ; and boldly added, that as long as Richard was alive, the English could not with Justice own any Sovereign but him. In fine, he maintained that the Person

(a) If a King is subject to the Law, with regard to the Alienation of the Crown Jewels, why not in other Respects?

1399.

son whom they called King, had committed much more heinous Crimes than those for which Richard was deposed: That he had entered the Kingdom again contrary to his Oath, after having been banished, and without being legally recalled: That not content with disturbing the Quiet of the Land by an unjust and impious Insurrection against his Sovereign, he had moreover dispossessed him: That he had also demanded Judgment against him, without offering to prove the Impeachment, or permitting the Party accused to make his Defence, contrary to the express Laws of the Realm. He concluded with saying, That if the Wrong done Richard was not capable of moving the Hearts of the English, at least their common and manifest Dangers ought to stop the Course of these violent Proceedings.

This Speech had not the Effect the Speaker expected. It was so unseasonable, that supposing the Majority had been of his Mind, it was impossible to go from what had been done. But the greatest Part of the Members persisted in the same Maxims they had followed when Richard was deposed. Accordingly the Bishop reaped no other Fruit from his Harangue, than to be confined in the Abby of St. Albans, from whence however he was shortly after released without any farther Punishment.

The Bishop imprisoned.

The Bishop of Carlisle's Opinion having been unanimously rejected, the Parliament came, with regard to Richard, to a Resolution so very extraordinary, that there is some Reason to suspect that History is defective in this Place. However, all the Historians agree, that it was resolved Richard should be kept in Confinement during Life, and maintained like a great Prince: but in case any Attempts were made for his Deliverance, Richard himself should be put to Death the first. If this be true, it cannot be denied that he was really condemned to die, seeing his Life was not granted him, but on a Condition which was not in his Power. Besides, such a Condition cannot be annexed to the Sentence of a Criminal, but on Supposition that he is already condemned, Extraordinary Sentence passed upon Richard.

¶Tis

1399.
Remarks on the Sentence.

'Tis not my Business to determine to what Point the Authority of the Parliament may be extended with respect to the King's Person. I shall only observe, that this is the second Instance of a King of England's Deposing without being heard in his Defence, and without so much as observing the usual Formalities prescribed by the Law in the Trial of the meanest Subject. The Parliament which deposed Edward II, was satisfied with decreeing that he should be kept in safe Custody during Life. But this Parliament to Richard's Deposing adds the Sentence of Death : for no otherwise can we consider the Condition upon which his Life is granted him. Let us farther remark, that one of the chief Articles of Impeachment against that Prince, was his putting to Death the Duke of Gloucester, his Uncle, without a previous Trial. And yet this same Parliament condemns him unheard, upon his bare Confession, when a Prisoner ; not that he was guilty of the particular Crimes laid to his Charge, but, that he was unworthy to wear the Crown. They are not content with stripping him of his Royalty, but order that he shall be imprisoned for Life. What do I say ? They really condemn him to die, since in seeming to grant him his Life, they add a Condition which in all likelihood would quickly make him lose it. If in perusing the Reign of Richard II, a Man cannot help detesting the Principles of the Shrewsbury Parliament, which tended to make the Lives, Honours and Fortunes of the Subjects depend on the King's Will, what ought he to think of this here ? By the contrary Extreme, they put the Life and Honour of the King himself in the Hands of his Subjects, and refuse the Sovereign a Privilege, which there is not an English Subject but what has a just Right to demand. The Examples which these two Parliaments have afforded, are a clear Evidence that the English Constitution can never pretend to that Degree of Perfection which some would fain ascribe to it, till the Bounds of the Prerogative Royal, and of the Privileges of the Parliament are precisely marked out.

While

Whilst the Two Houses acted in Concert and with equal Ardour, for the Interest of the Prince they had placed on the Throne, the Convocation was sitting in St. Paul's Church. As the King rightly judged, that in order to support himself in the Throne, it was absolutely necessary to make the Clergy his Friends, he sent to them the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, to assure them of his Protection. The Earls being admitted into the Assembly, said, they were come from the King, not to demand Mercy, as was customary in the late Reign, but to acquaint the Clergy of the King's Resolution to maintain them in their Privileges and Immunities. They added, they had Orders to assure the Convocation that the King was ready to join with them in whatever Means should be judged proper to extirpate Heresy, and punish obstinate Hereticks. They concluded, with desiring the Clergy to put up their Prayers to Heaven for the Welfare of the King and Kingdom. Nothing was more capable of gaining the Hearts of the Ecclesiasticks, than what the King promised them with regard to Heresy. The Number of the Lollards which daily increased, gave the Clergy just Room to fear, that in the End a Reformation might be set on foot, which could not but be very detrimental to their Temporal Interests. Accordingly, the Assurances the King gave the Convocation were received with great Satisfaction and Thankfulness.

1399.
The King assures the Clergy of his Protection.

He promises to extirpate Heresy.

Some Days after the Parliament having finished the main Affairs to the Satisfaction of the King, and in appearance to the good Liking of the whole Kingdom, was dissolved according to Custom. Prorogations were not then so frequent as they have been since.

The Parliament dissolved.

During the whole Sessions, Henry had not much minded foreign Affairs. Domestick Matters seemed to him of greater Moment, since the Business was to settle a Revolution which had procured him the Crown. As soon as he found himself at Leisure from these first Concerns, he thought of Means to justify before the other Sovereigns, the Alterations which had lately been made in England. The Deposing a King being a Thing hateful in its self, and which seemed to affect all Princes, it was no easy Task to persuade Ambassadors sent to divers Courts.

1399. persuade them that a Nation should have sufficient Reason to make use of so violent a Remedy to free themselves from Tyranny. Upon this Account, Henry dispatched Ambassadors to all the principal Courts of Europe, to endeavour to put a good Face on the deposing of Richard, and his own Promotion. He was chiefly concerned to keep fair with the Court of France, as the only one whose Resentment he had Reason to dread. He was not ignorant that Charles VI had formed a Design to revenge the Injury done his Son-in-law, and that his Distemper, into which he relapsed upon hearing the News, had hindered him from instantly breaking the Truce of 28 Years, which he had made with England. Henry pitched upon, for Ambassadors, the Bishop of Durham, and Earl of Worcester, who had Instructions to propose a perpetual League and Alliance between the two Crowns. Moreover, he ordered them to make Overtures for a double Marriage. The First which he had projected, was between Henry his eldest Son and one of the French King's Daughters, or of some one of his Uncles: The Second between his own Daughter and one of the same King's Sons, or of some one of his nearest Relations. The Ambassadors met with a cold Reception in France; but as they had Orders not to obstruct their Negotiation on the Score of Ceremony, they waited with Patience till the first Heat of the French was over.

*Proposals to the Court of France.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 108.*

Disposition of the other Courts.

As for the Rest of the Courts of Europe, Henry had no occasion to proceed so circumspectly. The Emperor Winceslaus who was still alive, was a Prince that had stupified himself with Drinking, and who like the other German Princes little regarded what passed in England. As for the Kings of Castile and Portugal, they were rather Gainers than Losers by the Revolution, which had advanced their Brother-in-law to the Throne. So that they readily approved of it, or at least seemed to do so.

The Gascons ready to revolt.

But another Affair of greater Importance created the new King a deal of Uneasiness. Guienne was upon the Point of revolting. Already the Gascons publicly talked of putting themselves under the Dominion of France. It was the City of Bordeaux, Richard's Birth-Place, that stirred up the whole Province, out of Affection for that unhappy Prince, whose Misfortunes they lamented. On the other Side, the Court of France, watchful to take the Advantage of these Dispositions, had sent the Duke of Bourbon into Guienne, to foment these Discontents. The famous Robert Knolls, Governour of that Province, who was no less to be commended for his Prudence than for his Valour, had a hard Task to curb the rebellious Spirit which had seized the Gascons. And perhaps he would never have compassed it, had he not been speedily assisted by the Earl of Worcester, who being on an Embassy at Paris, flew to his Aid. The Moderation and prudent Conduct of these two Lords, brought about what Force would hardly have accomplished, and at length they had the Satisfaction of seeing the Commotions appeased. 1399. They are appeased.
the

Henry had also upon his Hands another Affair which gave him no less Disturbance. As he was very sensible, that amidst all the Acclamations he was flattered with, it could not be but that the late Revolution had bred many Male-Contents, it was his Interest to keep Peace with his Neighbours. Accordingly this was what he had purposed to do, least a Foreign War employing his Forces Abroad, he should be left unprovided in Case any sudden Insurrection should happen at Home. Besides, a War would have obliged him to demand Succours of the Parliament, which he was willing to avoid; till his Government was better established. These Considerations made him extremely sorry to hear that the Scots had broke the Truce, and taken Werk-Castle. He thought best, however, to take no notice of this Insult, till it should be more in his Power to revenge it. But least his doing so should give the King of Scotland Encouragement to go on, he sent Embassadors to him to demand Satisfaction for this Outrage. However, as the Scots complained likewise, on their Side, of some Breach on the Part of the English, he made use of this Pretext to demand that the Truce might be confirmed by mutually repairing the Damages the two Nations had done one another. When Robert broke the Truce, he imagined France would take his Part, and that the deposing of Richard would stir up in England

The Scots take Werk-Castle.

Embassy to Scotland. Act. Pub. VIII. 113.

1399. A Negotiation. Commotions, of which he designed to take the Advantage. But having found that France lay still, and that there was not the least Prospect of Troubles in England, he did not think fit to push his Enterprize any further. So that without much Sollicitation, he agreed to a Negotiation between Henry and Him.

Henry tries to gain the People's Affections. Matters being thus in a fair way Abroad, Henry chiefly applied himself to what might contribute to the supporting him in the Throne. Two Things were absolutely necessary to that End. First, to preserve the Good-Will which the People had hitherto expressed for him. Secondly, to guard Richard so strictly that it should be impossible for him to make his Escape. As to the First, he affected to make himself popular, by showing upon all Occasions his Detestation of the Tyrannical Government of his Predecessor, and his having more at Heart the People's Interests than his own. With this View it was, that he ordered all the Blank-Notes, which Richard had extorted from the Inhabitants of London, and of the seventeen condemned Counties, to be brought into Chancery and publicly burnt. These Blank-Bonds which were called Ragmans, had been filled up, not only with the Sums Richard had been pleased to exact from such as had signed them, but moreover with an Obligation to observe, under certain Penalties, the Statutes of Shrewsbury and whatever had been done by Virtue of them. In burning these Bonds, Henry's Intent was to insinuate to the People that he designed not to take the Advantage of these extorted Engagements, much less to practise the like Methods to fill his Coffers.

Richard is shut up in Pontfract-Castle. As for the deposed King, he did not think proper to keep him any longer in the Tower of London, for fear he should stir up Compassion in the Hearts of the Citizens, but ordered him to be conducted to the Castle of Leeds in the County of Kent. Some Time after, fearing still that Richard's being so nigh London would give too frequent Occasion to talk of him, he caused him to be shut up in Pontfract-Castle in the North.

Death of the Duke of Breagne. This Year in November, John the Valiant, Duke of Breagne, departed this Life in his Capital City. His first Wife

Wife was Daughter of Edward III, by whom he had no Issue. By his second, Joan of Navarre, he left two Sons, of whom John the eldest succeeded him, under the Guardianship of the Duke of Burgundy and Oliver de Clifton. 1399.

In this manner passed over the three first Months of the Reign of Henry, in a deceitful Calm, which was followed by violent Storms. It was necessary to enlarge a little on the first Events of this Reign, because they serve for Foundation to all the rest.

The Year 1400 was ushered in by a Conspiracy against the King, from which he was not delivered but by a sort of Miracle. Historians somewhat differ about the first Author of this Plot, which was commonly ascribed to the Abbot of Westminster. However it is more likely, that the Abbot was only the Agent of the Lords Conspirators, and lent them his House to meet in, . Perhaps he was made use of to sound the Inclinations of several Persons, according as he was directed by such as were more powerful than he. Be this as it will, it is agreed that his House was the Place where the Plot was formed, in which were principally concerned, the Dukes of Albemarle, Sur- 1400. Conspiracy against the King.
rey and Exeter, the Earls of Glocester and Salisbury, the Bishop of Carlisle, and Sir Thomas Blunt. All these Lords had been in great Favour with Richard II, and they were the same Persons to whom the King had left their Honours and Estates taken from them by the Parliament. Among these Conspirators, John Holland Duke of Exeter was his Half-Brother, and Edward de Langley Duke of Albemarle his First-Cousin. Notwithstanding these Ties of Blood, and the Favours they had all received from the King, they resolved to assassinate him and restore Richard to the Throne. The Affection this unfortunate Prince had shown them, the Desire of revenging the Disgrace they had lately suffered, and of which they looked upon the King as the principal Author, and perhaps the Fear that the Pardon which had been granted them, was not sincere, concurred to inspire them with this furious Resolution. They had drawn into the Plot one Maudlin a Domestick of Richard's, who They set up a Pretender for Richard.
resembled ard.

1400. resembled his Master so exactly that many might be deceived. The Result of their Debates was, that the Duke of Exeter and John Montacute Earl of Salisbury should pretend to challenge one another at a Tournament to be held at Oxford, and should desire the King to Honour the Tournament with his Presence, and that, whilst he should be intent upon the Sight, an Opportunity should be taken to murder him. To the End each Man might know what Part he was to act in this Tragedy, they took Care to set down all Particulars in Writing. Then they transcribed six Copies signed with their Names, and sealed with their Seals, of which each of the principal Parties took one. Pursuant to their Plot, the Duke of Exeter waited upon the King at Windſor, and made him the Request agreed upon. The King not mistrusting a Half-Brother, to whom he had just given such signal Marks of his Favour and Good-Will, promised to be at Oxford on the Day appointed. Thus the Conspirators, pleased with this first Success of their Undertaking, went and prepared for the putting it in Execution.

The Conspiracy is discovered.

Under Colour of the Pomp and Magnificence usual upon such Occasions, the Lords Conspirators came to Oxford with a numerous Train of armed Domesticks, and Abundance of other Attendants, who made as if they were come purely out of Curiosity. The Duke of Albemarle was the only Person that failed to be at the Rendezvous. He had a Mind first to visit the Duke of York his Father, then at his Seat at Langley, not to communicate the Plot to him, but about some other Business he had with him. Whilst they were at Dinner, the Duke of York seeing a Paper in his Son's Bosom, asked him what it was. The Son confounded at this unexpected Question, replied, but with a visible Concern, that the Paper contained nothing of Moment. But whether the old Duke had received some Hints of the Conspiracy, or whether his Son's Confusion inspired him with the Curiosity, he snatched it out of his Bosom. This Paper was one of the six Copies which the Conspirators had signed. His Surprise was exceeding great at seeing all the Particulars of the Plot. He reproached reproached his Son with it the more justly, as, besides the Blackness of the Crime, he had not scrupled to expose the Life of his own Father, who was Security for his good Behaviour. But his Reproaches being incapable of remedying the Evil, he resolved to prevent it by acquainting the King with what was come to his Knowledge. To that End, he ordered his Horses to be saddled immediately, with Design to go himself to Windsor and carry the Paper to the King. The young Duke knowing he should be undone past Redemption, if the King was informed of the Conspiracy by any but himself, resolved to be before-hand with his Father. As he was better able than the old Duke to undergo the Fatigue of Riding, he took a By-Road and came full speed to Windsor. Upon his Arrival he cast himself at the King's Feet, and discovered to him the whole Plot. Henry was so far from imagining, that the Duke of Exeter and the rest of the Conspirators, had conspired to take away his Life, that he believed at first that the Duke of Albemarle had invented the whole Matter on Purpose to ruin them. He told him if the Thing was true, he very readily pardoned him upon his being sorry for it; but in Case it was a malicious Accusation, he should find no Favour. The Duke of York coming very soon after, put him out of all doubt, by giving him the Paper he had taken from his Son. After so convincing a Proof, the King being no longer able to question the Truth, broke off his Journey to Oxford, where he was to be next Day. Mean while he resolved to stay at Windsor, to see what Course the Conspirators would take when they should perceive they had missed their Aim.

All this while, the Lords were extremely uneasy at Oxford about the Duke of Albemarle's not being yet come. They had already sent to his House to know the Reason of his Stay; and Word was sent back that he was set out for Oxford, but was gone by the Way of Langley with design to visit the Duke his Father. This Visit having begun to give them some Suspicion, their Trouble increased upon hearing that the King designed not to come to Oxford, and had seen the Dukes of York and Albemarle. Then,

The Conspirators in Perplexity.

1400.

They resolve to take up

Arms, and give out

Richard

was with them.

The People

flock to the pretended

King.

no longer doubting that they were discovered, they resolved to accomplish by Force, what they had not been able to do by other means. Accordingly they dressed up Maudlin in Royal Robes, and gave out that he was Richard, who having made his Escape out of Prison, was come to implore the Assistance of his good Subjects.

The Readiness wherewith the People ran to list under the Banner of the pretended King, plainly showed that all had not approved of the deposing of Richard, though the Parliament acted in the Name of the whole Nation. Wherefore, there is nothing we may be more easily mistaken in, than in judging of the Sentiments of the People, by those of their Representatives. The Reason is, because the Representatives debating upon Matters laid before them, without having any Instruction from those they represent, their Resolves cannot be considered but as Private Opinions, though they are of Force to bind the People. Upon this Account it is, that the People sometimes appeal to Arms from the Decisions of Parliaments, when they are thought too prejudicial to the Welfare of the Nation. Of this we have many Instances, but particularly in the Reign of Henry IV. Although Richard had been deposed by the Parliament, it appeared upon several Occasions, that the People had acquiesced to the Sentence purely by Constraint, since, not only at the Time we are speaking of, but upon other Occasions, they were always ready to run after any Counterfeit Richard that was presented to them.

In a very short Time, the Lords Conspirators saw themselves at the Head of so formidable an Army, that they thought it in their Power to go and seize upon the King at Windsor. It is said that in two or three Days their Army consisted of forty Thousand Men. With these numerous Troops they began their March towards Windsor, which lies not above thirty Miles from Oxford, and came there at Break of Day, in great Expectation of surprizing the King. And indeed, Henry not imagining they could possibly be so soon in a Condition to execute such an Enterprize, had staid at Windsor till that very Night, and was not gone but a few Hours before they came. His going away.

1400.

away having frustrated their Design, they were in very great Perplexity. Some were for marching directly to London, before the King should have time to secure the City. Others affirmed, that their Business was to go to Pontfract, to free Richard, and set him at their Head. This Diversity of Opinions made them lose in Debates the Time they should have spent in Acting. So that the King had Leisure to provide for his Defence, and draw together an Army of Twenty Thousand Men. As he did not question but the Male-Contents would take the Road to London, he went and expected them upon Hounslow-Heath, in hopes that his Army would daily increase. Whatever might be the Issue, he was resolved, though much inferiour in Numbers, to hazard a Battle. This Resolution inspired his Troops with Courage, and made them imagine the Male-Contents were not so strong as they were reported to be. It was likewise the Cause, that many seeing the King march unconcerned to meet the Enemy, came and joined him in order to show their Diligence: The which doubtless they would not have done, had he shown on this Occasion the least Signs of Fear or Diffidence. At such Junctures the Majority of the People, without considering Right or Justice, generally declare for that Side which is like to be uppermost.

The King's Resolution of Advantage to him.

Mean while the Conspirators seeing the King in a Condition to withstand them, durst not cope with him. Whether it proceeded from their little Capacity, or whether from the Fear of being deserted by their Army, they minded nothing but how to avoid a Battle. Instead of marching towards London to meet the King, they took the Road to Reading, and encamped near Colebrook, where the young Queen Isabella lay. * Here it was they resolved to put an end to Mandlin's acting the Part he had hitherto played, thinking it more to their Purpose to spread a Report that Richard was

The Conspirators avoid a Battle,

and retire.

* The Conspirators marched, in Suspence what to do, from Oxford to Colebrook, and there hearing the King was on Hounslow-Heath with his Army, turned back and marched towards Reading, to a Place called Sunning. Where the Queen was, and not at Colebrook.

1400.

*The four Chiefs are attacked by the Mayor of Cirencester. Act.
Pub. viii.
89, 90.*

Two are taken and beheaded on the Spot.

was in Yorkshire at the Head of a Hundred Thousand Men. Their Design was not only to avoid the King, but, in all appearance, to approach Wales, from whence they expected to have Assistance, Richard being well-beloved in that Country. Be that as it will, having encamped near Cirencester (a), the Generals took up their Quarters in the Town, whilst the Army lay without. The Duke of Surrey and the Earl of Salisbury lodged at one Inn, and the Duke of Exeter and the Earl of Gloucester at another. Their little Experience having caused them to neglect to set Guards at the Gates, the Mayor of the Town, a Man of Sense and Courage, took Advantage of their Negligence, to do the King a signal Piece of Service. He privately drew together in the Night, four hundred Townsmen, and having ordered the Gates to be shut, he divided his Followers into two Companies, and attacked at once the two Inns where the four Generals lodged. Though these Lords had none but their Domesticks with them, they defended themselves the best Part of the Night. During the Conflict, one of their People bethought himself of setting Fire to a neighbouring House, imagining the Townsmen would busy themselves in extinguishing the Flames, and by that Means give the Lords an Opportunity to escape. But this Stratagem had a quite contrary Effect. The Townsmen still more irritated by this Action, redoubled their Efforts, and at length broke open the Inn defended by the Duke of Surrey and Earl of Salisbury. These two Lords being much wounded, were beheaded on the Spot by the Mayor's Order. On the other Side, the Duke of Exeter and Earl of Gloucester, perceiving they were no longer able to hold out with the few People they had with them, found means to escape over the Houses, and to get out of the Town by the Help of some of the Inhabitants. Their Intent was to march the Army into the Town: but upon their coming to the Camp, they found it deserted. The Report which the Soldiers heard, and the Fire which they saw in the Town, having made them believe that the King's

(a) And not Chichester, as some have affirmed. Act. Pub. V. viii. 89.

King's Army was there, they had all taken to sudden Flight, seized with a Panick Fear, which made them see Danger where there was none. Thus the Lords perceiving it out of their Power to execute their Design parted, the better to provide for their Safety. But they had the Misfortune to be taken, and shortly after lost their Heads on the Scaffold. Maudlin was also apprehended as he was endeavouring to escape into Scotland, and condemned to be hanged. The Abbot of Westminster making off likewise, was seized with so terrible a Fright, that he fell into a Fit of the Apoplexy and died. As for the Bishop of Carlisle, he was taken also and sentenced to Death. But though on the Score of his Character the King had pardoned him, yet he was not in a State to enjoy the Benefit, when the News of his Pardon was brought him. The Terror of the Punishment he was to undergo, had made such an Impression upon him, that it caused his Death, at the very Time that Mercy was influencing the King to spare his Life.

The other two are likewise taken and executed.

The Bishop of Carlisle dies with Fear. Act. Pub. VIII. 165.

In all likelihood, the ill Success of this Enterprize hastened Richard's End. There is some Diversity among Historians about the Manner of his Death, but they all agree he did not die a natural Death. Some affirm, he was starved to Death. Others pretending to be better informed, relate his Death with these Circumstances. After the Troubles above-mentioned were appeased, by the Death of the principal Conspirators, one Sir Thomas Pyers came to Pontfract, attended by eight Men. The same Day he arrived, Richard perceived at Dinner that the Viſuals were not tasted as usual. He asked the Reason of it of the Person whose Business it was, and upon his telling him that Pyers had brought an Order from the King to the contrary, he took up a Knife and struck him on the Face with it. Pyers coming in, with his eight Attendants at the Noise, Richard found he was a dead Man, and resolving to sell his Life at a dear Rate, he snatched from one of them a Battle-Ax, with which he defended himself so bravely, that he slew four of them. But at length, standing accidentally near Pyers who was got upon a Chair, the Villain discharged upon his Head a Blow with a Club, which laid him dead at his Feet *.

Tragical Death of Richard II.

1400.

Thus died this unfortunate Prince, Thirty-three Years old, of which he had sat Twenty-two on the Throne *'. A melancholy Reward for the many signal Services the Prince his Father had done England! He was carried to London in a Coffin with his Face uncovered, that every one might view it. His Funeral was solemnized at St. Paul's, at which the King was pleased to be present. This done, he was carried to Langley Church, and interred without any Ceremony. Henry V. ordered his Body to be removed to Westminster-Abby, and laid among his Ancestors. Though it was reported all over the Kingdom that he had been murdered, yet no Inquiry was made into the Matter. The which confirmed the People in their Belief, that the King was not innocent. The Truth is, if Richard died of a natural Death, it would have been necessary to undeceive the Publick. But in case he lost his Life by violent Means, it was a hard Matter for any one to make use of them without the King's Knowledge.

Notwithstanding Richard had not been beloved whilst he sat on the Throne, his Misfortunes failed not to excite the Compassion of the very People that had been so ready to desert him. It is peculiar to Misfortunes, especially of Princes, generally to change Hatred into Pity. Of this we shall see in the Sequel of this very Reign several Instances.

The

* This is Fabian's Account. Walsingham says, he fasted himself to Death for Grief at the Miscarriage of the Plot. Stow says, he was kept fifteen Days together in Hunger, Thirst and Cold, till he died. Polydore Virgil says, he was not suffered to touch or taste the Victuals which lay before him. Hector Boethius will have it, that Richard fled in disguise into Scotland, where giving himself up wholly to Contemplation, he lived and died, and was buried at Sterling. Perhaps this was true of some Counterfeit Richard.

*' The beautiful Picture of a King fighting, crowned in a Chair of State, at the Upper-end of the Choir in St. Peter's Westminster is said to be his. Speed, p. 615.

The English Writers pretend, that Charles VI. made great Preparations to try to restore Richard to the Throne. But the French Historians take no Notice of the Court of France's stirring much in that Affair. It is true, we have in the Collection of Publick Acts, several of Henry's Orders relating to the Preparations carrying on in France, with design to invade England; But that might be an Effect of Henry's Policy, to let the World see the Necessity of Richard's Death. And indeed, the Truce of Twenty-eight Years between the two Crowns was confirmed in May this very Year, and all the pretended Arguments of France ended in a Negotiation to draw from England Queen Isabella, with whom Richard had not consummated his Marriage. It was not without Reason that Henry endeavoured to maintain the Truce with France. He had a Quarrel with the King of Scotland, which would not suffer him to carry his Forces out of the Kingdom. The Occasion of the Rupture between these two Princes was this :

1400.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 223.

Truce with France confirmed.

Robert Stuart, King of Scotland, the Third of that Name, was desirous to match Prince David his eldest Son, with a Daughter of George Dunbar, Earl of March. The Earl taking this Alliance as a very great Honour, joyfully received the Proposal, and even paid before-hand part of the Marriage Portion. However, shortly after, by Intrigues needless to be mentioned here, Prince David married a Daughter of Archibald, Earl of Douglafs. Dunbar was extremely vexed at this Affront, to which the King added another Cause of Discontent, by refusing or delaying to refund the Money he had received. The Desire of Revenge, and making the King sensible that he deserved a better Treatment, inspired the Earl with a Resolution to go over to the King of England, and do all the Mischief possible to his Enemies. To that End, he imparted his Design to the Earl of Northumberland, Governour of the Northern Counties, who presently after sent him a Safe-Conduct from the King his Master. Upon the Receipt whereof he repaired to Henry, and had several Conferences with him. The King of Scotland well aware that the Earl of March was hatching some Plot against him in England,

The Cause of the War with Scotland.

1400.

land, sent Ambassadors to Henry to demand his being delivered up, and upon Henry's Refusal, proclaimed War against him.

Henry marches into Scotland.

Henry not thinking fit to stay and expect his Enemy in England, prepared to carry the War into Scotland. As soon as his Army was ready to march, he went to Newcastle, and sent Robert a Summons to appear in Person, and do him Homage for the Kingdom of Scotland. In this Citation, he revived the Pretensions of Edward I. to the Sovereignty of that Kingdom, 'ever since the Time of Lochrinus Son of Brutus, first pretended King of the whole Island of Albion. Upon Robert's refusing to do him any such Homage, Henry entered Scotland, and made some Progress. Towards the End of September he went and besieged the Castle of Edinburgh, defended by Prince David and the Earl of Dowglass his Brother-in-Law. But the Season being too far advanced to be able to go on with the Siege, he quitted it on a sudden, and retired into his own Dominions. As soon as he was gone, the Scots under the Conduct of Sir Patrick Hepborne, and Thomas Habington, made an Inroad into England, and revenged in a cruel Manner the Ravages the English had committed in Scotland. But in their Return, they were met by the Earl of Northumberland, who defeated them and stript them of their Booty. Hepborne, one of the Scotch Generals, was slain in the Action. This Victory procured between the two Nations a Truce for six Weeks, which was afterwards prolonged, by reason of the Posture Henry's Affairs were in. Hardly had he begun the War with Scotland, when he received certain Intelligence that the Welsh were about to Revolt, and that they had a Design to raise in their Country Commotions, which could not but be attended with fatal Consequences. This was the Reason, that notwithstanding his Success against the Scots, he was not willing to make the most of his Advantages, for fear of exasperating them too much. This is what Buchanan himself owns, ascribing to his Generosity what was only the Effect of his Policy; the Motions of the Welch having made it absolutely necessary to have Peace with Scotland.

He besieges Edinburgh

Raises the Siege

The Scots invade England and are defeated.

Truce between the two Kingdoms.

The

The Welsh, who ever since the Reign of Edward I. 1400. were subject, or rather united to England, believed they Revois of the Welsh under might take Advantage of the present Juncture, to recover their former State. Owen Glendour, or Glendowrdwy, as Glendour. Act. Pub. VIII. 159. he is always called in the Collection of Publick Acts, was the Person that set them upon this Undertaking. This Man, though a private Gentleman only, had all the Qualities proper for such an Attempt, if the Welsh Forces had been strong enough to afford him any Prospect of Success. Nevertheless, he managed Matters in such a Manner, that for several Years he found Means to free his Countrymen from the Subjection they had been kept in by the English. A Law-Suit he had lost at London with the Lord Grey of Ruthin, his Neighbour, was the first Occasion of the Disgust he conceived against the whole English Nation*. The Conspiracy which I have spoken of before, breaking out in England at this very Time, Glendour, not questioning but it would cause great Disturbances, thought it a fair Opportunity to cast off the English Yoke. He privately founded the Welshmen, and finding they were inclinable enough to receive his Impressions, he brought them without much Difficulty to a Resolution to assert their Liberty. He would have forthwith discovered his Designs, if the ill Success of the English Conspiracy had not withheld him. The Moment he saw the King engaged in the War with Scotland, he set about executing his Project, and got the Welsh to renounce with one Consent their Allegiance to the Crown of England, and acknowledge him for Sovereign. From thenceforward he always stiled himself Prince of Wales, Act. Pub. VIII. 156. as appears by several Acts.

His first Enterprize was against the Lord Grey his Adversary, whom he took Prisoner in a Battle; after which, he made him marry his Daughter, without giving him his Liberty, contrary to his Word.

Emboldened

* He was brought up at the Inns of Court in London, and was it seems King Richard's Esquire: But in Henry's Time he retired to his Mannor of Glendowrdwy, where he had a Dispute with the Lord Grey, for having entered upon Part of a Common lying between Ruthin and Glendowrdwy.

1400.
Glendour takes the Earl of March Prisoner.

Henry is glad of the Earl's Misfortune.

The Emperor of Constantinople arrives in England.

1401.
Statutes in Church-Affairs.

Emboldened by this Success he made an Incurſion into Herefordſhire. Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, who had retired to his Lordſhip of Wigmore, finding that the King was employed in Scotland, thought to do him a ſignal Service, by drawing together the Gentry of the Country, in order to go and put a ſtop to the Progreſs of the Rebels. But he had the miſfortune to be taken Priſoner in a Battle; and though he offered a large Ransom, he could not obtain his Liberty. Glendour imagined that a Priſoner of that Conſequence might be of uſe to him hereafter, or at leaſt that the King would ſpare no Coſt for his Deliverance, and therefore his beſt way would be rather to treat with the King, than with the Priſoner himſelf. But he was very much out in his Conjecture. Henry was too well pleaſed to ſee the Earl of March a Priſoner and unable to hurt him, to contribute any Thing towards his Release. Glendour however ſtill kept his Priſoner, hoping by his Means he ſhould one Day be able to give the King ſome Diſturbance, as it actually happened. The Earl was not ſorry afterwards at his being in the Hands of the Welſh. Henry's Jealouſy of every Thing relating to his Crown, and his Severity to thoſe that would diſpute it with him, made the Earl ſenſible, that his Life was ſafer in Priſon than at his own Houſe. Mean while the King being taken up in the Scotch War, Glendour had Time enough to ravage the Country on the Weſt-Side of the Severn, and to carry off a great Booty.

About the End of this Year, Manuel Paleologus, Emperor of Conſtantinople, arrived in England to move for Succour againſt Bajazet Emperor of the Turks. The King gave him an honourable Reception, and made him ſome Preſents. But as for Succour, he put him off till his Affairs were better ſettled in his own Kingdom. The Emperor went from England to France, from whence he departed not till two Years after, upon News that Bajazet his Enemy was vanquiſhed and made Priſoner by Tamerlane.

On the 21ſt of January 1401, Henry aſſembled a Parliament, at which there were ſeveral Statutes made with relation to the Church. The firſt confirmed the Acts paſſed in the Reigns of Edward III and Richard II, against such as sued for Provisions in the Court of Rome, or carried to the Ecclesiastical Courts Causes belonging to the Cognizance of the Civil Judges. This was the old Quarrel with the Court of Rome. What rigorous Proceedings soever were used to stop the Course of these Abuses, they had been ineffectual, because it was the Interest of too many People to countenance the pretended Prerogatives of the Pope. But however this Parliament having considered that the Pope still went on to engross the Collations of all the Church-Preferments of the Kingdom, and that the Ecclesiastical Courts were continually encroaching upon the Civil ones, came to a Resolution at length to oppose those Things effectually. To that Purpose were revived the old Statutes of Provisors in the Reigns of Edward III and Richard II, commonly known by the Name of the Statute of Praemunire. As this Term often occurs in the English History, it will not be improper to explain it. By Praemunire then is meant, either the Statute it self, or the Penalty annexed to it. Former Parliaments acting from the same Motive as this, had ordained Punishments against the Provisors, that is, against such as sought after Bulls, called Provisiones or Gratia Expectativa, from the Court of Rome, for Benefices either vacant or that should be so. The same Punishments were ordained against those that carried to the Court Ecclesiastical what belonged to the Civil. When any Person incurred the Guilt of this sort of Crime, a Writ or Order was issued against him, beginning with these Words, Praemunire facias, whereby he was commanded to appear in the King's Court. Hence the Statute as well as the Penalty annexed were called Praemunire *. This Penalty consisted in Forfeiture of Lands, and Imprisonment during the King's Pleasure. In Process of Time several other Offences of a like Nature with those that were the first Cause of the Statute, were made liable to the same Penalty. So that all the Statutes of Praemunire are only Enlargements of those 1401.

Statutes of Praemunire:

Explication of this Term.

* Supposed to be used in the barbarous Law-Latin, instead of Praemunere.

1401.

those that were made in the Reigns of Edward III and Richard II. In general, the Præmunire chiefly regards Offences committed in Matters Ecclesiastical, wherein the Civil Jurisdiction is concerned.

The Clergy were all along so intent upon favouring the Pretensions of the Court of Rome, that the Pains former Parliaments had been at to remedy this Abuse, were to little Purpose. The Statute I have just spoken of had scarce any better Effect. The Attempt made last Year to dethrone the King, having given him Cause to fear the like Conspiracies for the future, he had resolved to keep fair with the Clergy, that they might be attached to his Interest. So that although he did not think proper to refuse his Assent to the new Statute, he connived however at the Breach of it, as much as, or more than any of his Predecessors. But this was not the only Thing he did to gain the Affection of the Clergy. His Condescension for them in another Article, of no less Importance, drew upon him the Blessings of the Ecclesiasticks, and caused him to be looked on by the whole Body, as a Prince exceeding zealous for the Church.

Statute against Hereticks.

Since Wickliff first published his Opinions about the End of the Reign of Edward III, his Doctrine had gained so much Ground, that the Clergy were in continual Apprehensions of its getting uppermost. I have already related that in the Reign of Richard II, the Bishops had obtained a general License to imprison Hereticks without being obliged to have a particular Order from the Court, but that the House of Commons had caused it to be revoked. From that Time there had been no Alteration on that Account, except that the King granted more frequently the like Orders. However, as the Penalty of Imprisonment was not capable to curb the pretended Evil the Bishops were in dread of, Henry having always in view the gaining of the Affection of the Ecclesiasticks, recommended to the Parliament in a very pressing manner the Care of the Church's Concerns. How reluctant soever the House of Commons might be to persecute the Lollards, the Credit of the Court and Cabals of the Clergy, obtained at length an Act for for the burning of obstinate Hereticks. This Statute was no sooner passed, but the Ecclesiastical Court immediately condemned one William Sawtre * a Lollard, who being delivered over to the secular Power, was burnt alive by Virtue of the King's Writ *¹ directed to the Mayor of London. This Man was the first who suffered Death in England for the sake of Religion. During this Session several Acts were likewise passed concerning the Disputes between the English and the Court of Rome, of which I shall have Occasion to speak in another Place.

1401.
A Lollard
burns.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 178.

Since the Truce with France had been confirmed, Charles VI, or rather the Duke of Orleans his Brother, and the Dukes of Berri and Burgundy his Uncles, who governed in his Name, had often demanded the young Queen Isabella Widow of Richard II. Henry had deferred giving a positive Answer; not but that the Demand was very just: But two Reasons made him desirous of keeping that Princess if possible. First, as he could not help being apprehensive of a War with France, he was willing to make a firm and lasting Peace with Charles VI, to which he believed the Marriage of Isabella with the Prince his Son would mightily contribute. With this View it was, that before he returned a positive Answer to the Court of France, he had frequently proposed this Match. But neither the Brother nor Uncles of Charles would ever consent to it, not being able to think of marrying the young Queen to a Prince whose Father was looked upon by all the World as the Murderer of her first Husband. They alledged however another Reason for declining it, namely, That her Father not being in a Condition to manage his Affairs, they durst not treat of his Daughter's Marriage without his Consent. A second Reason why Henry put off sending back Isabella, was his being very sensible that the Restitution of the Money Richard had already received with her would be demanded. However, as he had no plausible Pretext to detain her, he consented at last to restore her Negotiation about sending back Richard's Widow.

ibid.
p. 186.

Henry demands Isabella for his Son,
He is put off.

He sends her back.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 194.

* Parish-Priest of St. Ouse in London.

*¹ Writ de Heretico Comburendo.

1401.

with all her Jewels. He knew how to manage it so dextrously, that in the Conventions made upon that Account at Lelingham, there was no mention of any Restitution. That was the Subject of another Negotiation, which I shall speak of hereafter.

*Marriage of Blanch, Henry's Daughter, with the Earl Pa-lat n.
ibid.
179.*

Whilst this Affair was transacting, Henry had in Germany another Negotiation on Foot, about a Marriage between Blanch his eldest Daughter, and Lewis of Bavaria, Grandson of Robert Earl Palatin of the Rhine, who was just advanced to the Imperial Throne, vacant by the Death of Henry of Brunswick Successor of Winceflaus. This Affair was concluded in May, to the King's great Satisfaction. The Princess's Portion was forty Thousand Pounds Sterling. At the same Time, a Treaty of perpetual Alliance was made between the Emperor and Henry.

The King's Expedition against the Welsh.

Since the Revolt of the Welsh broke out, Henry had made no Preparations to reduce them to Obedience. Meanwhile Glendour taking Advantage of his Negligence, continued to ravage the Counties bordering upon Wales. Far from dreading the King's just Indignation, he studied to provoke him by continual Insults. Henry's Indolence appeared strange to abundance of People, because they were ignorant of the Reason of it. Before he took up Arms against the Welsh, he was desirous of finishing his Matters with France, and even intended to make a strict Alliance with that Crown. As he knew the Rebels could have no Assistance but from thence, he believed, could he deprive them of that Protection, they would not be able to hold out long. Mean Time the Negotiations with France going on slower than he could wish, and Glendour still continuing to infest his Borders, he could put off no longer his taking up Arms. Before he put himself at the Head of his Army, he published a General Pardon for the Welsh, provided they submitted within a certain Time. But finding his Clemency had no great Effect, he set forward to go and chastise them. Upon his Approach Glendour withdrew to the Mountains, where it was impossible to come at him. All the King could do was to ravage the Country, which done, he returned to London.

*Act. Pub.
VIII. 225.*

The

The King's Return to his Metropolis was immediately followed by the Discovery of a Plot against his Life, by the Means of an Iron Instrument with three sharp Spikes placed in his Bed. Had he lain down upon them, they must inevitably have run through his Body; but by good Fortune, he perceived them just as he was going to lye down, What Inquiry soever was made, there was no possibility of discovering the Author of this traiterous Attempt.

1401.
An Invention to kill the King discovered.

It was this and not the last Year, as some affirm, that Edmund Duke of York the King's Uncle, died. He left two Sons, Edmund Duke of Albemarle, who took the Title of Duke of York, and Richard Earl of Cambridge. I shall have frequent Occasion hereafter to speak of the Descendants of the younger, who by his Marriage with a Sister of the Earl of March, acquired to his Issue the Right to the Crown, which caused such terrible Commotions in the Kingdom.

Death of the Duke of York. Succeeded by his Son.

In the Beginning of the next Year, the King by his sole Authority, and without the Aid of the Parliament, laid a Tax for the Marriage-Dowry of his Daughter. Though in so doing he had acted by Virtue of an antient Privilege of the Kings on the like Occasions, the People however appeared dissatisfied at it. There were not wanting in the Kingdom such as laid hold of every Thing to find Fault with his Conduct. About the Middle of the Year he had Reason to perceive that there was still a dangerous Ferment among his Subjects, and that if the Male-Contents sat quiet, it was only in Expectation of a favourable Opportunity to rise. On a sudden, when he least thought of it, a Rumour was spread over all England, that Richard was alive, and had levied an Army in Scotland, in order to come and drive out the Usurper. It was a plain Case that the People wished the News true, since it met with so much Credit from all Hands. At the same Time, on Church-Doors and in other publick Places, Papers were posted up containing outrageous Invectives against the King. The Authors of these Papers asserted among other Things, that the Crimes for which Richard was deposed, were nothing in Comparison of the tyrannical Proceedings of Hen-1402.

Tax raised for the Marriage of the King's Daughter.
ibid.
p. 242.

A Rumour of Richard's being alive.
ibid.
p. 225.

Writings against the King.

1402.
He punishes the Authors.

ry since he had been on the Throne. The King was so provoked at this Audaciousness, that he swore he would never pardon such as were found guilty. Sir Roger Clarendon, natural Son of Edward the renowned Prince of Wales, fell the first Sacrifice to his Vengeance, being sentenced to dye the ignominious Death of a Traitor. Eight Monks guilty of the same Crime were hanged with him. Walter Baldock Prior of Lanne underwent the same Fate, with a Franciscan Doctor in Divinity, who was hanged in his Friar's Habit, to the great Mortification of the Fraternity *. Many more were apprehended, upon finding among the Papers of a certain Priest, a List of the Names of those that had declared Richard was living. But upon strict Examination, it appeared that he had made that List, on purpose to make the News the more likely, or upon Conjectures void of Foundation. So that he suffered alone the Punishment of his Rashness. The King's great Severity upon this Occasion, contributed very much to efface the good Opinion People had conceived of his Clemency and Humanity.

Marriage
of the King with Joanna of Navarre.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 261,
281.

Whilst these Things were doing in England, Henry treated in Foreign Courts about three Marriages at once. The First was between Philippa his second Daughter, and Eric King of Denmark, who was yet a Minor, under the Guardianship of Queen Margaret his Mother. The Second, was between the Prince of Wales, and a Sister of Eric's. And the Third was his own, with Joanna of Navarre Widow of the Duke of Bretagne. Of these three Marriages, the first and the last were concluded that very Year; but the Prince of Wales's came to nothing.

The Court
of France get in their Power the Person of the young Duke of Bretagne.

Henry in resolving to marry the Dutchess Dowager of Bretagne had plainly an Eye upon getting by Virtue of this Marriage, the Guardianship of the three Princes which the late Duke of Bretagne had left Minors. At least the Court of

* He being asked what he would have done if King Richard had been living and in the Field, boldly replied, he would have ventured his Life for him against any Person whatever. Upon which he was hanged, and drawn in his Habit. Walsingham, p. 557.

of France, taking it for granted, appeared very much alarmed at this Alliance, which could not but be very prejudicial to the French Interest. This was the Reason that the Duke of Burgundy, Guardian of the young Princes, took them from the Dutcheſs their Mother, and carried them to Paris, where they were brought up. By this Means the Court of France took upon them to manage the Affairs of Bretagnes, during the Non-Age of the young Duke. If it be true that Henry had any Eye upon Bretagne, he not only miſſed his Aim, but drew upon himſelf fresh Enemies. During the whole Time the new Duke was in France, the Bretagnes ſcarce ever ceaſed infeſting the Coaſts of England, though there was no open War proclaimed between their Sovereign and Henry. The King's Marriage was not conſummated till the Year following.

ibid.
264, 281.

Theſe Negotiations being over, Henry prepared in good earneſt to chaſtiſe the Welſh. To that End, he drew together a numerous Army, and heading them in Perſon, he advanced towards Wales. Upon his Approach, Glendour retired to the Mountains of Snowdon, where he knew there was no attacking him. In the mean Time the King was making ready to ravage the Country; but the Weather became on a ſudden ſo tempeſtuous, that he was forced to retire. The Storms were ſo uncommon for the Season, that the English fancied Glendour had made a Contract with the Devil, to prevent the Deſtruction of his Country.

*Expedition
of the King
into Wales.*

Whiſt the King was taken up in thoſe Parts, the Scots under the Command of Hepborne, Son of him ſlain two Years before, made an Irruption into England, and advanced as far as Newcaſtle. The Earl of Northumberland, General of the North, was not at firſt in a Readineſs to repulſe the Invaſion. But having drawn together a great Body of Troops, whiſt they were continuing their Ravages, he went and expected them at Nisbet, where he attacked and defeated them, carrying off all their Booty. The Scotch General loſt his Life in the Action.

*The Scots
invade England.
P. 272.*

*Are defeated at Nisbet.
P. 278.*

Theſe

1402.
Another Invasion of the Scots.

p. 292.

The French and English blame one another for breaking the Truce.

These Troops were properly but the Vanguard of an Army which the Earl of Douglas was leading forward with all Speed, in order to make a more considerable Push. Upon News of Hepborne's Defeat, he hastened into England with Design to fight the Earl of Northumberland, who finding he was not strong enough to hazard a Battle, was fain to retire and leave the Borders exposed to his Ravages. Mean while he laboured without ceasing to augment his Army; and as soon as he was in a Condition to face him, he marched in quest of him, attended by Henry Hotspur his Son, who was reckoned the bravest Man in England. The two Armies meeting at Halidown-Hill, a bloody Battle ensued, wherein the English were entirely victorious. The Scotch General lost an Eye, and was taken Prisoner, together with the Earl of Fife Nephew of the King of Scotland, the Earls of Angus, Arbol, Monreith, and a vast Number of other Officers of Distinction. According to the English Historians, this Battle was fought in July, about a Month after the former. Buchanan places it among the Occurrences of the Year 1401, but in this we may be sure he is mistaken.

During the whole Summer the Ambassadors of France and England continued at Lelingham, on Account of the Truce which had been violated, particularly in Guienne. The French Historians cast the Blame upon England, and the English upon France; but we are not obliged to believe either of them on their bare Word. In Cases of this Nature, the Historians of both Nations seldom fail of contradicting one another, and upbraiding each other with Partiality. Their Honour it seems, is at Stake in maintaining upon all Occasions the Faith and Truth of their respective Sovereigns. Be this as it will, in the Situation the two Kings had for some Time been in, it could be to neither's Advantage to renew the War. Henry thought France alone was the Place from whence the Welsh and the Male-Contents in England could procure any Aid, the which he believed he should prevent by Means of the Truce; but in that he was mistaken. On the other Side, King Charles's Distemper, the Divisions then in his Court and Council, gave gave the French no Room to expect any great Success of their Arms. So that the Truce was again confirmed without examining too strictly which Side broke it first. 1402.

This Affair being settled, the French Ambassadors brought another upon the Board, by demanding the Restitution of what King Richard had received with his Queen, Henry, who foresaw this Demand, had given Instructions beforehand to his Ambassadors what Answer they should make. They pretended to be surprised at the Proposal, and said they had no Orders about that Matter. However, they added as out of their own Heads, that they did not question but in Order to keep up a good Understanding between the two Crowns, their Master would agree to deduct that Sum out of the Million and half of Crowns, which were still due to England for the Ransom of King John. This Pretension did not a little Surprize the French Plenipotentiaries, who having no Instructions upon that Head, deferred their Answer till they should know their Master's Pleasure.

The French demand Isabella's Portion. Act. Pub. VIII. 232, 302.

The English offer to deduct it out of King John's Ransom.

The Parliament having met in October, granted the King a Subsidy, and then confirmed divers Statutes made in the Reign of Edward III. in Favour of the Clergy. The Session ended with a Petition to the King, recommending to him the Concerns of the Scotch Earl of March, who had done the State considerable Service since his putting himself under the Protection of England.

The Parliament meets

The new Queen being arrived in England, in February 1403, the King went and received her at Winchester, where the Marriage was consummated. After which she was solemnly crowned at London.

1403. The Queen arrives.

Whilst the Court was wholly taken up in Entertainments and Diversions, the King received Intelligence that the French were going to make a Descent in the Isle of Wight, under the Conduct of Valeran Earl of St. Paul, of the House of Luxemburg. This Earl having married a Half-Sister of Richard II. pretended to act in his own Name, to revenge the Death of the King his Brother-in-law. The Court of France connived at the Undertaking, and even furnished the Earl with Troops, as if the Truce were not infringed.

The French make a Descent in the Isle of Wight.

1403.

infringed by it at all. Mean Time this Bravado succeeded but lamely with the Earl of St. Paul. After plundering some Villages, he found himself constrained to re-imbark in a dishonourable Manner, though the Inhabitants of the Isle had received no Succours. Henry complained to the Court of France of this Invasion. But he could get no other Answer than that it was the King of France's Intention to keep the Truce. Had he not been bent upon avoiding a Rupture, the Earl of Paul's Attempt would have afforded him a very good Handle to renew the War. But as he was sensible that the Kingdom abounded with Male-Contents, he would not give France an Opportunity openly to support them. On the contrary, by keeping up the Truce with that Crown, he designed to deprive them of the Prospect of being succoured. So that taking no further notice of the Insult, he was contented with obtaining of the Court of France a fresh Confirmation of the Truce.

Henry takes no notice of it.

The Duke of Orleans challenges him.

Act. Pub.
VIII. 310,
348.

They who governed for King Charles were not ignorant of Henry's Dispositions, the which made them have the less Regard for him. This very Year the Duke of Orleans sent him a Challenge to fight, either in single Combat, or with a hundred Knights on each Side. The Reason of this Challenge is no where mentioned in the English History, and the French alledge no better for it than the Duke of Orleans's earnest Desire to revenge the Death of Richard II. It is very likely, that it was only a Whim of the young Duke's to signalize himself by sending a Challenge to a King of England; but the Answer he received was not very agreeable to him. Henry gave him to understand that there was a wide Distance between a King and any Person whatever that was but a Subject, and therefore he could not accept his Challenge; but that they might happen to meet in a Place where both attended with a more numerous Train than what he proposed, they might measure Swords with one another. This Answer drew from the Duke of Orleans a Reply full of Invectives, calling him Traitor, Usurper, Murderer of his King. Henry sent him another Answer no less abusive, wherein after giving him the the Lie in Form, he charged him with having made use of Soretry to throw his Father into the Distemper he was troubled with. Mean while he sent to know of the French Ambassadors, still with his at Lelingham, whether this Challenge had the Approbation of the King their Master; if so, he looked on it as an open Declaration of War. But though the Ambassadors were frequently called upon to return a positive Answer, there was no possibility of getting them to speak plainly. They only affirmed that their Master had not broke the Truce, neither did he intend to break it for the Time to come. In fine, as the English pressed them for an Answer from those that governed in Charles's Name during his Illness, they plainly told them, that whether the King continued out of Order, or whether he recovered his Health, they were to expect no other Reply. Henry construing this Silence as a disavowing, or rather thinking fit to take no notice of it, for Reasons already mentioned, took up with this slight Satisfaction.

Henry complains of it, but receives no Satisfaction.

During the Congress, the French Ambassadors moved again the Business of Isabella's Portion. On the other Side, the English Plenipotentiaries demanded the Residue of King John's Ransom, and endeavoured to shift off the Demand of the French, by alledging that as their Master received not Isabella's Dowry, he was not obliged to repay it. But this gave their Adversaries Room to retort in their Turn, though with no better Reason, that neither had their Master entered into an Engagement with Henry concerning King John's Ransom. However, as Henry demanded not the Arrears of the Ransom, but in order to escape paying back the Dowry, he had his Ends, and the Business stopped there.

Debate about Isabella's Portion.

Whilst the Ambassadors of the two Crowns were employed in cavilling with one another, Matters of much greater Moment for Henry were passing in England. Nothing less was at Stake than his Crown. From the Beginning of his Reign, to the Victory over the Scoss at Halidown-Hill, no Lord was in greater Favour with the King than the Earl of Northumberland. As it was properly by Quarrel between the King and Earl of Northumberland.

1403. the Readiness wherewith the Earl joined Henry upon his landing in England, that his Affairs had so good an Issue, the King had all along retained a very grateful Sense of it. The Government of the Northern Counties, the Post of High-Constable, the Grant of the Isle of Man, and several other Favours, were plain Indications of his Esteem for the Earl, who on his Part had always appeared very zealous for his Service. The last Year he had gained over the Scots two Battles, the latter of which had disabled them from giving his Master any fresh Disturbance. This was a signal Piece of Service, but over and above the Favours he had received, the King had taken care to reward him with the Grant of certain Lands. Nothing therefore seemed capable of breaking the Harmony between the Services of the Earl and the suitable Returns of the King. And yet a Point of Interest set them so at Variance, that these happy Dispositions were altered on a sudden. The Occasion of their Difference was this.

I observed before, that the Earl of Northumberland had in the Battle of Halidown taken several Prisoners of great Quality ; the King being of Opinion that these Prisoners belonged to him, thought it not fit to leave them in the Earl's Disposal. Perhaps his Design was to raise a large Sum by their Ransom, or else by their Means to procure an advantageous Peace with Scotland. Be that as it will, immediately after the Battle, he sent an express Order to the Earl to release none of his Prisoners. This Order was quickly followed by another, enjoining him to deliver them into his Hands. The Earl having flattered himself with having the Benefit of their Ransom, forthwith repaired to Court, and requested the King to let him have the Disposal of them : but he had the Mortification to meet a Denial. He exclaimed against the Injustice that was done him, and spake to the King in somewhat a too haughty Manner. The Reproaches which fell from him on this Occasion put Henry so out of Humour with him, that he no longer looked upon him with the same Eye he used to do. This Coolness was carried so far, that when the Earl would have spoke with the King, he was denied Admittance into his Presence.

Presence. This Alteration could not but exasperate the Earl, who thought that his Services deserved quite another Treatment. As he was naturally of a very haughty Temper, he could not bear this Slight without seeking Occasion to be revenged. He had, as one may say, placed the King in the Throne, and he imagined himself powerful enough to pull him down again. This was the Result of several Conferences he held with Henry Hotspur his Son, the Earl of Worcester his Brother, and some other Lords. Their Aim was to set the Crown on the Head of Edward Mortimer, Earl of March, still a Prisoner in Wales; not out of Affection for that Prince, but because there was no other plausible Pretence to gain the People to their Side. Pursuant to this Resolution, they dispatched secret Agents to Glendour and Mortimer, to persuade them to come into their Plot. Glendour promised to employ all his Forces to make it succeed. As for the Earl of March, he very readily lent his Name towards executing a Project which tended to the placing him on the Throne. But that all Three might find their Account in it, it was agreed that the Earl of March should be put in Possession of the Kingdom; that the Earl of Northumberland should hold all the Country lying North of the Trent, on Condition of doing Homage to the Crown, and that Glendour should have all the Counties West of the Severn. The Project being thus formed, the Earl of Northumberland made believe for some time that he had forgot the Reason of Disgust the King had given him. He even came to Court, where he took Occasion to represent to the King, that the Earl of March having lost his Liberty in his Service, it was but reasonable he should pay his Ransom to Glendour. This Remonstrance was taken very ill. Henry was too well pleased with the Earl's being in the Hands of the Welsh, and unable, as he imagined, to hurt him, to be willing to contribute to his Deliverance. He replied, therefore, with some Signs of Anger, that the Earl having marched against the Rebels of his own Accord, and with the sole View of saving his Lands from Plunder, it was his Business to get out of Prison as well as he could: That for his Part, he did not think

The Earl of Northumberland projects the dethroning of the King.

Leagues with Glendour and Mortimer.

Terms of their League.

The Earl of Northumberland solicits the King to redeem Mortimer.

The King refuses.

1403.

The Earl pushes the Execution of his Project.

himself obliged to see to procure his Liberty, much less to pay his Ransom. The Earl was not at all surpris'd at a Denial which he expected. His Intent was only to make appear the Hard-heartedness of the King to the Earl of March, and to insinuate from thence, that he must needs be convinced of the Justice of the Prisoner's Title to the Crown, since he dreaded to see him at Liberty. This Denial having made no Alteration in the Scheme of the Confederates, the Earl of Northumberland retired into the North, where he privately made sure of some Troops who were to be in Arms upon the first Notice. Then he settled a Correspondence with some Scotch Lords, who engaged to assist him. He likewise gave several Scotch Prisoners their Liberty, upon their promising to levy Troops for his Service. At the same Time Glendower was making extraordinary Preparations, which coming to the King's Ears, obliged him to be upon his Guard, though he knew not for what they were intended.

The Male-Contents take up Arms.

They publish a Manifesto.

and report Richard to be alive.

The King
vindicates himself in a Proclamation.

As soon as the Confederates were ready, the Three Percies suddenly appeared in Arms in the North. Shortly after, the Earl of Northumberland falling ill, his Brother and Son marched with the Troops that were under his Command to join the Welsh, who were advanced as far as Shropshire. Upon the two Armies joining the Male-Contents, they published a Manifesto, setting forth, that the King treated his Subjects in a tyrannical and intolerable Manner; that none but the Clergy had access to him; and that the greatest Lords could not be admitted into his Presence, unless introduced by some Bishop: That moreover, he converted to his own use the Subsidies granted by the Parliament for the Occasions of the Publick. They likewise spread a Rumour of Richard II. being alive, and that he was at Chester with a Body of Troops ready to join them.

Henry, who had received no Intelligence of their Designs, was extremely surpris'd at the News of this Rebellion. But as he had luckily an Army in a Readiness designed against the Welsh, he was not at a Loss what to do. However, as he was apprehensive that the Rebels Manifesto might have an ill Effect among the People, he believed he ought ought before all Things to try to efface the Impressions it might make, by an Answer which he published by way of Proclamation. He cleared himself from the two main Articles of the Manifesto; first by denying that he had ever refused to admit into his Presence the very meanest of his Subjects, much less any of the Nobility, to which he took his whole Court to witness. As for the Subsidies granted by Parliament, he affirmed, that the greatest Part of the Money had been paid on account of the War with Scotland, to the Earl of Northumberland himself, as he could make appear by his own Receipts. 1403.

After he had published this Answer, he marched towards the Rebels, who were encamped at Shrewsbury. When the two Armies were just ready to engage, he seemed to dread the Issue. His Uneasiness caused him to offer such advantageous Terms to the Male-Contents, that Henry Percy being moved by them, desired the Earl of Worcester his Uncle to go to the King, and endeavour to procure an Accommodation. 'Tis said, that in the Conference with this Earl, the King made such Condescensions in favour of the Male-Contents, that they would have had reason to be satisfied with them, had not the Earl of Worcester given them to understand there was no Hopes. Be this as it will, the Negotiation coming to nothing, the Fight begun. The King at first had so much the worst on it, that he was very like to be entirely defeated. He had his Horse killed under him, and the Prince of Wales his Son was wounded in the Face. But he so dextrously managed his Body of Reserve, that by their Help he regained the Ground he had lost, and inspired his Troops with fresh Courage. From that Moment the Battle was entirely changed to the Disadvantage of the Male-Contents. The King's last Charge having put their Army in disorder, they were so briskly pushed, that Henry obtained a complete Victory. Young Percy was slain, and buried after the Battle with the King's Leave. Hotspur is slain. But afterwards, altering his Mind, the King ordered him to be taken up, and his Body to be cut in Quarters, and fixed on Poles in the High-ways. The Earl of Wor- Aët. Pu^t: cester VIII. 320.

1403. cester being taken Prisoner was beheaded, and his Head set up over London Bridge *.

The Earl of Northumberland withdraws to the North.

Henry comes to York.

He pardons the Earl of Northumberland.

In the mean time the Earl of Northumberland being recovered of his Illness, was advancing with a Body of Troops in order to reinforce the Army of the Male-Contents, and to take upon him the Command. But hearing by the way of his Son's and Brother's Misfortune, he dismissed his Troops, not daring to keep the Field with so small a Number of Forces before a victorious Army. Mean while the King was on the March towards the North, well knowing the Center of the Rebellion was there, by reason of the Earl of Northumberland's great Interest in those Parts. Upon his coming to York, he took all imaginable Precaution to secure the Fidelity of the Northern Counties, as well by the Oath he required of the Inhabitants, as by other ways which he judged proper. When he thought he had taken pretty sure Measures to prevent an Insurrection, he summoned the Earl of Northumberland to appear before him. He promised a Pardon in case he obeyed without delay ; but threatened him with utter Ruin, if he refused the Favour offered him. The Earl, having no way to extricate himself out of the ill State he was in, chose rather to cast himself upon the King's Mercy than be condemned to perpetual Banishment. So without Hesitation he repaired to York, and threw himself at the King's Feet, who punctually kept his word with him. He even left him all his Estate, except the Isle of Man, which he had given him in the Beginning of his Reign. This was a very slight Punishment for so great a Crime. But apparently Henry not being able to forget the Services the Earl had done him, thought he still owed him this Acknowledgment : Besides, the Criminal had been already sufficiently punished in the Death of his Son and Brother.

Whilst

* It is said that Earl Dowglas (who was in the Battle, and taken Prisoner, but released for his Valour) slew Three, Boetius says Four, armed in all Points like the King. Henry is reported to have slain that Day 36 with his own Hand. Of the Rebels were killed about 6000, of the King's Side about 1600.

Whilst the King was taken up in the North, the Court of France, having had Intelligence of the Northumberland-Rebellion, was resolved to take Advantage of the Commo-1403. France ever ready to take Advantage of the Troubles in England.
 tions. It appears by several Places in the Collection of Publick Acts, that Henry had received Advice of a Descent which the Duke of Orleans was to make in England, whilst John Duke of Burgundy, who had lost his Father this Year, was to besiege Calais. It is observable, that notwithstanding the Truce which the two Crowns confirmed almost every Year, France never failed to show her Readiness to take all Advantages which the Troubles in England during this Reign might afford her. They who were at the Helm during King Charles's Illness, and particularly the Duke of Orleans, the King's Brother, never looked upon themselves bound by any Treaties they made with Henry. This might be made appear with the utmost Evidence. But as Henry always got clear of the Troubles which were raised in his Kingdom, the Court of France could only discover frequently their ill Intentions, without reaping any Benefit. In all Appearance, Henry's late Victory over the Rebels frustrated the Projects the French Court had formed against him. However, not to suffer him to enjoy perfect Tranquillity, as the French Ministers managed the Affairs of Bretagne during the Duke's Minority, they set the Bretains upon making a Descent on the Western Coasts of England, where they committed great Ravages. This Invasion, for which the Bretains could not alledge the least Reason, nettled the King exceedingly. Nevertheless, as he was willing to avoid coming to a downright War with Bretagne, in hopes of gaining one Day the young Duke to his Interests, he thought it his best way to hide his Resentment. This was the Reason he was satisfied with some slight Excuses which the Regency of Bretagne made him, by disclaiming the Persons concerned in the Descent, as having acted without Orders from the Government. But at the same time, he privately gave leave to the Inhabitants of Plymouth and other Places in those Parts, to fit out a Fleet under the Command of William Wilford. This Admiral, though without the King's Act. Pub. VIII. 325. The Bre- tains make a Descent.
The English take their Revenge.
 Com-

1403. Commission, set sail for Bretagne, where he revenged the Damages his Countrymen had received from thence.

1404.
A Subsidy granted the King.

The Parliament, which was called last Year and afterwards prorogued, met again in January 1404. The King found means to obtain a Subsidy, which must needs have been very extraordinary, since it was not to be recorded *. But it is to no Purpose to endeavour to bury in Oblivion such sort of Precedents which Princes upon Occasion but too frequently call to Remembrance.

Act of Indemnity.

The Severities which had been exercised upon the Authors and Accomplices of the two late Rebellions, induced the Parliament to petition the King for a General Indemnity. Henry willingly complied with the Request; but there were such Exceptions in the Act as rendered it almost of no Effect, since he pardoned only those whom he designed not to punish.

Richard is reported to be living.

Henry's severe Proceedings against those who were infatuated with the false Notion of Richard's being still alive, had not been capable of undeceiving every Body. A Rumour being once more spread that Richard was in Scotland, one Serlo who had been a Gentleman of his Bed-Chamber, repaired thither to see his old Master. He met with People who showed him a Man somewhat like Richard, but not enough for a Domestick who had long served him to be deceived. Nevertheless Serlo feigning to take him for Richard himself, wrote to several Persons in England, that he was actually with him. The Testimony of a Man who could not, as was thought, be mistaken, produced so great an Effect, that Abundance of People suffered themselves to be carried away with the Cheat. The Countess of Oxford, Mother of the late Duke of Ireland, Favourite of Richard, believed it, or made as if she did so, and took Care to spread the Report. She even sent to several Persons in Richard's Name, little Silver Harts, such as that Prince used to give his Favourites. Meanwhile the King's

* This Tax is said to be Twenty Shillings of every Knight's Fee, and Twelve Pence of every one that had Twenty Shillings a Year in Land, or Twenty Pounds in Money or Goods, and so upwards according to that Rate.

King's Diligence prevented the ill Effects this Imposture might have caused. He ordered the Countess to be taken into Custody with her Secretary who was in the Secret. Some Time after Serlo was apprehended on the Borders of the North, and hanged at Berwick. As he confessed the Cheat, and that he had a Hand in the Murder of the Duke of Gloucester, the Report he had spread died away by Degrees.

1404.

Henry publishes the Author of the Report. Act. Pub. VIII. 379.

This Year the Bretains made a Descent at *Portland, and plundered some Houses on the Coast. But advancing farther into the Country, they met a Body of Militia ready to receive them, who drove them back to their Ships and took several Prisoners of Distinction. Hitherto there was no Declaration of War between England and Bretagne: but the two Nations however continued to act in a hostile Manner against one another, though without the Consent of the Sovereigns. France, which then managed the Bretains, was very glad to set them and the English at Variance, for fear Henry should strengthen himself with the Alliance of Bretagne when the Duke was of Age. For this Reason Henry winked at these Insults, lest he should deprive himself of that Advantage. Besides, he seemed bent upon avoiding, as much as possible, the entering into any War, being apprehensive that the Male-Contents would raise Troubles in the Kingdom, in Case he was obliged to send his Forces Abroad.

The Bre- tains land at Port- land. ibid. 356.

Henry con- nives at it.

It was apparently with the same View, that he concluded with Scotland a Truce from the 6th of July this Year, to the Easter next ensuing.

Truce with Scotland.

However he could not think that all his Precautions could for ever prevent the War he so much feared. Besides, that he plainly saw France waited only an Opportunity to break with him, he considered that the Affairs of Wales were in a very ill Way. Glendour not only persisted in his Rebellion, but had even made himself Master of some

* At Dartmouth says Speed and others. The Lord Du Castile their Leader was slain, and three Lords with Twenty Knights taken Prisoners.

1404. Places on the West-Side of the Severn. Moreover the Truce with Scotland being to expire in the Spring, there would be a Necessity of marching an Army into the North. These Considerations put him upon calling a Parliament in order to obtain an Aid which should enable him to carry on these Wars.

The illiterate Parliament.

The Parliament met October the 6th. It is said that the King in the Writs of Summons commanded the Sheriffs not to return any learned Men for Knights of the Shire or Burgesses for the Cities and Towns, and that from hence this Parliament was called the Illiterate or Unlearned. It is a Question however whether the King's Command was so express as is affirmed *. The Breach Richard II had made in the Nation's Liberties by the like Method, and the Punishment which followed, were still too fresh for Henry to imitate so publicly his Example, and expose himself to the same Danger in the present Juncture. It cannot be denied however but the Court upon this Occasion strove to get such Representatives chosen as were not too much prepossessed in Favour of the Clergy, for Reasons we shall see presently. Be this as it will, the King having represented to the Parliament thus composed, the great Want he had of an extraordinary Aid, the Commons went in a Body and presented to him a Remonstrance, wherein they told him, that without burdening his People he might supply his Occasions, by seizing the Revenues of the Clergy. They set forth, That the Clergy were possessed of the Third Part of the Lands of the Kingdom, and that not doing the King any personal Service, it was but just they should contribute out of their Revenues towards the pressing Necessities of the Publick. That it was evident the Riches of the Ecclesiasticks made them negligent in their Duty, and that the lessening of their excessive Incomes would be a double Advantage for the State and for the Church.

The Commons petition the King to seize the Church-Lands.

The

* Most of the Historians say, such were to be chosen as had no Skill in the Laws.

The King received this Remonstrance so as plainly made appear it was not disagreeable to him, and in all likelihood it was he himself that by his Emissaries had chalked out this Way of raising the Sums he wanted. The Archbishop of Canterbury being present, thought it his Duty to speak upon an Occasion wherein the Interest of the whole Body of the Clergy was at Stake. He represented to the King, that although the Ecclesiasticks served him not in Person, yet could it not be inferred from thence, that they were unserviceable, since they sent into the Field their Vassals and Tenants whenever there was Occasion : That the stripping the Clergy of their Estates, would be a Means to put a Stop to the Prayers which they offered Night and Day to God for the Welfare of the State ; and that there was no expecting God would afford his Protection to the Kingdom, if the Prayers of the Church were so little valued. He added with a menacing Tone, that if these Considerations were not capable of diverting the Plot against the Clergy, it would not be found an easy Matter to deprive them of their Estates without exposing the Kingdom to great Risks, and that as long as he should be Archbishop of Canterbury he would oppose it to the utmost of his Power. Then falling on a sudden on his Knees to the King, he pressed him strongly on the Score of Conscience, endeavouring to make him sensible that of all the Crimes a Prince could commit, there was none of so deep a Dye as the invading the Clergy's Revenues. Whether Henry was moved with the Archbishop's Speech, or whether the strong Opposition he foresaw from the Clergy, convinced him that he should find it a hard Task to compass his Design, he suddenly resolved to drop it. He answered the Archbishop, that although he blamed not his Zeal, yet he could not help saying, that his Fears were Groundless ; that when he mounted the Throne, he had made a firm Resolution to favour the Church as far as in him lay, and he hoped by God's Grace to leave her in a better State than he found her. The Archbishop encouraged by this Reply, turned to the Commons, and spake to them in a manner not very proper to gain their Good-Will, telling them that their Demand was 1404.

The Archbishop of Canterbury opposes it.

The King yields to his Instances, 1404.

The Commons persist in it.

The Bill thrown out by the Lords.

A&S. Pub.
VIII. 381.

1405.

built wholly on Irreligion and Avarice. The Commons made no Answer to this offensive Speech ; but when they came back to the House, they resolved to persist in their Demand, and brought in a Bill to seize the Clergy's Revenues. But there was no possibility of getting it passed. The Sollicitations of the Archbishop and of the rest of the Clergy were so prevalent with the Lords, that they threw out the Bill. So that the Commons were fain to find other Ways and Means to supply the King's Occasions.

Towards the latter End of this Year, Innocent VII notified to the King his Promotion to the Papal Throne.

It is not at all strange that to the great Number of Enemies Henry had both at Home and Abroad, he should be unwilling to add the Clergy, who, as the Archbishop had threatened, would have had it in their Power to create him much Trouble. Though in Appearance all was quiet in the Kingdom, yet he discovered about the Beginning of the Year 1405, that some ill Design was brewing against him ; however he could not find out the Authors.

The Earl of March had pretty well concealed his Disgust when Henry was placed on the Throne : But the League he had made with Glendour and the Earl of Northumberland was enough to open the King's Eyes, supposing he had suffered himself at first to be deceived by his Dissimulation. He was too jealous of the Crown he wore, to believe the Earl was unmindful of his just Right. For this Reason he had always refused to take any Step towards procuring him his Liberty. Upon the same Account it was that he kept in safe Custody at Windsor his Children, that they might serve as Sureties for their Father's Good Behaviour. Notwithstanding all his Care, some Body found Means to carry off the Prisoners, and keep them concealed for some Time. But the King had them searched after so diligently, that they were found at length and brought back to their Confinement at Windsor. He would have severely punished this Attempt, if he could have discovered the Authors ; but all his Endeavours were to no Purpose. There was only a poor Lock-Smith hanged for having a Hand in it ; but he would not discover who they

Morti-mer's Children carried away from Windsor.

they were that set him on work. The Duke of York being suspected, was taken up and sent to the Castle of Pauenssey, where he remained a Prisoner above three Months. But as last he was released for want of sufficient Evidence against him.

1405.
The Duke of York is apprehended.

This Attempt made the King apprehensive that his Enemies would form some fresh Plot in favour of the Earl of March, and he imagined that before it broke out they had resolved to set these young Princes at Liberty. As Glendour was ever ready to countenance the Male-Contents, Henry to rid himself of his Fears, resolved to exert his utmost to destroy that Rebel. With this View he gave the Command of an Army to Henry his eldest Son, who in the Beginning of the Campaign came to an Engagement with the Welsh, and put their Army to Flight. Two Months after this Victory was followed by another and more important one, wherein Glendour's Son was made Prisoner. These two Defeats were not however capable of disheartening the Welsh. On the contrary, they made fresh Efforts in Defense of their Liberty. The Situation of their Country, the Assurances France gave them of a powerful Diversion, and in all Appearance the Knowledge Glendour had of a Conspiracy hatching in England, put them in hopes of better Success for the Future.

Act. Pub. VIII. 386, 387.
Prince Henry goes against the Welsh.
He gains two Battles.
March 11.
May 14.
p 390.

The Welsh persist in their Revolts.

It was not without Grounds that the Welsh relied upon the Assistance of France. That Crown, or rather the Duke of Orleans who then governed the Kingdom, made no Account of the Truce every Time he thought the breaking it would turn to his Advantage. Notwithstanding it had been confirmed in 1403, Mezerai owns, the Constable D' Albert and the Earl of Armagnac had taken from England above Sixty Places in Guienne. This very Year the Duke of Orleans openly besieged Bourg and Blaye, but could not take them, and the Duke of Burgundy was preparing to lay Siege to Calais. To facilitate his Undertaking, the Earl of St. Paul attempted to seize upon the Castle of Merck; but the Garrison of Calais running to its Relief, forced him to retreat in Disorder, though he was already Master of the Inner Court.

France daily seeks occasion to disturb Henry.

These

1405.
The King is denied Money by the Nobles and Clergy.

These continual Breaches of the Truce made Henry very sensible what he was to expect from France, in Case his Affairs took an ill Turn in England. For this Reason he was desirous to put an End to the War with Wales, before he showed his Resentment against the French, chusing rather to let them go on in their underhand Doings, than give Occasion for an open Rupture. With this View he had sent against the Welsh the Prince his Son, who had been crowned with the above-mentioned Success. Before he entered upon this Expedition, he had assembled the Lords to desire of them an Aid of Money, being ashamed to ask the Parliament which had so lately granted him a considerable Subsidy. But the Lords had flatly refused to comply with the King's Request, without the Authority of the Parliament. The Clergy, whom the King likewise caused to be sounded, had answered with the same Resolution, not being willing to establish a Precedent of that Nature, lest it should be turned into a Custom. Henry extremely nettled at these Denials, had dismissed both the Nobles and Clergy with Signs of Displeasure, which showed that he would not let slip an Opportunity of making them sell the Effects of his Indignation. By this Means he furnished certain Lords with a Handle to hasten the Execution of a Design which in all Appearance had been formed some Time.

Conspiracy framed by the Archbishop of York.

Richard Scroop Archbishop of York being disgusted, and wanting to revenge Richard, who had raised him to that Dignity, had engaged several Lords in a Confederacy to dethrone Henry. The Earl of Northumberland was one of the Number, though the King had formerly pardoned him in the like Case, and by his Interest in the North, had drawn the People of those Parts into the Confederacy. Thomas Mowbray Earl-Marshal, the Lords Bardolf, Hastings, Falconbridge, and several other Lords and Gentlemen came into the Plot, and levied a great Number of Troops, which they led to York where the Rendezvous was. As soon as these Forces, which made a considerable Army, were drawn together, the Heads of the Conspiracy published a Manifesto against the King, and caused it to be fixed upon the Doors of the Churches in York, that every one might see it. The Substance of the Articles contained in the Manifesto, was as follows :

1405.

I. That Henry upon his Return to England had protested and sworn, that he was only come to recover his Estate, and that he had no Design upon the Crown, and yet he had caused himself to be crowned King. The Rebels Manifesto.

II. That as an Arch-Traitor he had imprisoned his Sovereign, and forced him to resign his Crown, and then barbarously murdered him.

III. That after the Death of Richard, he unjustly detained the Crown from Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, to whom it lawfully belonged.

IV. That he had unjustly put to Death several Persons of Quality, who were guilty of no other Crime than endeavouring to redress the Male-Administration of the Government, and that contrary to Law, he had imprisoned the Bishops by his sole Authority.

V. That he had oppressed the People with needless Taxes, and by his Threats had hindered them from complaining.

VI. That he had violated the Privileges of the Nation, and his Oath to maintain them, by taking away the Freedom of electing Members of Parliament.

VII. That at a Parliament held at Winchester, he had given his Assent to a very pernicious Statute against the Roman Church, and the Authority conferred upon St. Peter and his Successors : That therefore Simony, Perjury, and other Disorders had crept in among the Clergy as well as Nobility, who sold the vacant Benefices to Persons unqualified to serve the Cure.

VIII. That notwithstanding the frequent Instances of several Lords of his Council, he had refused to pay the Earl of March's Ransom, and shifted off his just Petition, by falsely charging that Prince with having voluntarily yielded himself a Prisoner to the Welsh.

IX. That upon all these Accounts they had taken up Arms, with design to free the Nation from the Opposions

1405.

ons of this Tyrant, and place the lawful Heir on the Throne.

The Earl of Westmorland seizes the Heads of the Conspiracy by Fraud.

Some time before the King had Intelligence of this Rebellion, he had ordered a Body of Troops to march into the North, under the Command of Ralph Nevil Earl of Westmorland, to make Head against the Scots, who seemed willing to renew the War. The Earl was already just by York when he heard the News of the Insurrection. The Superiority of the Troops of the Rebels not permitting him to advance any farther, for fear of engaging in an unequal Fight, he thought his better way would be to use Policy. To that End, he dispatched a trusty Messenger to the Archbishop of York and the Earl-Marshal, to tell them from him, that considering their great Prudence and Zeal for the publick Good, he did not question but weighty Reasons had induced them to take up Arms, and desired them to impart them to him. The Confederates thinking him already shaken in his Loyalty, sent him word that they had no other Intention than to procure the Good of the Kingdom, and intreated him to come and join with them in the Defence of the Publick. This Answer made him judge that it would not be impossible to over-reach Persons who thought him capable of taking so readily their part. To keep them in this Belief, he told them by the same Messenger, that he was not so blind but he could see the Injuries which were done the Nation: However, he was afraid that they had been too hasty in their Proceedings: That before all things they should have taken care to make sure of the Concurrence of all the principal Lords, or at least of the greatest Part: That as for himself, he could not communicate to them all his Thoughts by a Third Person; but if they would agree to an Interview, he would more freely open his Mind to them. The Archbishop of York no longer doubting but the Earl was privately of the same Sentiments with the Confederates, pressed the Earl-Marshal to go with him to the Interview, and notwithstanding his backwardness, found Means to persuade him to it at last. The Place assigned for the Conference being being in an open Plain, and the Guards having advanced at an equal Distance on both Sides, the three Lords began to confer together. The Earl of Westmoreland protested that he had no less at Heart than they themselves, the Welfare and Prosperity of the State, and that he approved of the Articles of the Manifesto, except a few things which he wished they would alter. Then he proposed certain Means to put their Design in Execution, which to them appeared very judicious, and fully convinced them of his Sincerity. As soon as he found he had gained their Confidence, he ordered some Wine to be brought, and they all three drank together. All the while he affected to take one, then another by the Hand, and to give them Marks of a sincere Correspondence. Finally, to show how much he confided in them, he commanded his Guards to withdraw, which they did immediately. This Frankness obliged the Archbishop and Earl-Marshal to send away their People likewise, being desirous to show no more Distrust than he. But hardly were their Guards out of Sight, when the others returned upon the Gallop, and before the Archbishop and Mowbray could be relieved, they were both carried away to the Royal Army. The Seizure of their Leaders threw the Confederates into so great a Consternation, that it was not possible for the Earl of Northumberland, who staid at York, to keep their Troops any longer together. So that every one shifting for himself, the Earl saw himself also under a Necessity to make off, and go and shut himself up in Berwick, of which Place he was Governour. Some time after, the King being come to Pontfract, the Earl of Westmoreland brought his two Prisoners to him, who were both condemned to lose their Heads. The Archbishop suffered Death with a great deal of Courage, and was honoured by the People for a Martyr, till the King, by his Authority, put a stop to their Superstition. From Pontfract the King went to York, the Inhabitants whereof he punished severely. Then advancing toward the North in order to besiege the Castle of Berwick, he took on the Road the Lord Hastings and Falconbridge, who met with the same Fate as the Archbishop and Earl-Marshal. Upon

Earl of Northumberland flies to Berwick.

The two Prisoners
beheaded.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 398.

Other Lords executed.

1405.
Percy and Bardolf retire to Scotland.

the King's Approach, the Earl of Northumberland and the Lord Bardolf despairing of holding out a Siege, and dreading to fall into the Hands of a justly incensed Prince, withdrew into Scotland at the Lord Fleming's, who sheltered them at his House. Mean while, Henry became Master of Berwick, and several Castles belonging to the Earl of Northumberland, after which he marched back for London.

The French land in Wales.

Though Historians for the most Part ascribe the Rise of this Conspiracy to the King's threatening the Clergy and Nobility, upon their refusing the Aid he demanded of them, yet it appears that it had been formed before that Time. Whilst Henry was still in the North, the Marshal de Montmorency arrived in Wales with a Fleet of a Hundred and Forty Sail, on board of which he had embarked Twelve Thousand Men. As soon as he was landed he went and joined Glendour, and marched both together, and took Carmarthen, Worcester, and several other Places thereabouts, where they met with a great Booty. Mezerai, who places this Event in the last Year, says, that the Earl of March, of the House of Bourbon, caused the Undertaking to miscarry by his too long Delays. This makes appear, that the Court of France thought that their Army would be able to land in Wales just at the time the Archbishop of York's Plot was to break out. It may be the Preparations were begun the Year before, and that might occasion Mezerai's Mistake. It is much more probable he should be out in the Date of this Event than the English Historians, who refer to this Year the taking of their Towns, and the great Booty their Enemies got on that Occasion: Besides, we find in the Collection of Publick Acts, an Order from the King dated at Pontfract, which mentions the Descent of the French. It is true, in this Order their Leader is called Hungerville, and not Montmorency. But as there were not two Descents in the same Year, and in the same Country, it may be presumed that Hungerville made the Descent under the Direction of the Marshal.

Henry

Henry had no sooner finish'd his Affairs in the North, but he marched towards Wales, in order to defend the Borders against the French. But he was so retarded by the Badness of the Weather, that they had time enough to re-imbark, leaving Glendour to come off as well as he could. However the King could do Nothing against the Welsh, though deprived of the Assistance of their Friends, as well because the Season was too far advanced, as because in his March he had lost great Part of his Baggage.

1405.
The King marches against them.

One would think that after so manifest a Breach of the Truce, the French had no Mind to keep any Measures with Henry, but design'd openly to renew the War. But that was not their Intention. As the Conspiracy in England had not succeeded as they wished, they did not think proper to carry the Rupture any farther. Mean while to join Insult with Outrage, at the same time that they had just sent a powerful Aid to the Welsh Rebels, and their Forces had just taken several Towns, and ravaged Counties in England, they sent word to Henry, that their Intent was always to keep the Truce; as if bare Words were more proper to show the Sincerity of their Intentions than Facts directly opposite. This Behaviour was entirely grounded upon the vain Pretence of the private Quarrel the Duke of Orleans pretended to have with Henry for the Murder of Richard II, wherein he believed or feigned to believe, he might make use of the Forces of France, which he had the Disposal of without any Violation of the Truce between the two Crowns. So that all the Complaints which Henry could make upon this Score were to no Purpose. Since in order to have Justice done him, he could apply to none but the Duke of Orleans himself, who was the principal Author of all these Breaches. The Court of France was so well acquainted with the Temper, Character, and Politicks of Henry, that they were not afraid to insult him upon all Occasions, during almost the whole Course of his Reign. Henry V, his Son was not so gentle, but knew very well how to be revenged for the Affronts his Father had received,

The French Court's Breach of Faith.

1405.

Towards the End of this Year, Philippa, the King's Daughter was sent to the of King Denmark her Husband (a).

All being quiet in England after the Retreat of the French, 1406.

The Parliament meets.
Act for freedom of Elections.

the King call'd a Parliament which met March 1. 1406.

As his Design was to demand Money he readily gave his Assent to an Act to secure the Freedom of Elections with regard to Parliament-Men. This Act shows that in the Elections for the Parliament before, the King had done something which tended to the abridging the Liberty of Voting. As soon as this Act was passed, Henry demanded an Aid of Money; but he was plainly told, there was no visible Occasion for it. He was extremely offended at this

The Parliament denies the King Money.
He keeps the Houses assembled till they grant it.

Denial, but however durst not openly show his Resentment for fear of exasperating them. Mean while, he found out an Expedition which procured him what he wanted. This was to keep the Parliament assembled till they should of their own accord be brought to grant his Demand. So without any fresh Application, he continued the Session till the End of August. This was very inconvenient to the Members who had Business at Home, and at the same time very expensive for the People who were to bear their Charges. At length, the Commons, impatient of returning to their Homes, voted him a Subsidy, not without murmuring very much at the Constraint laid upon them.

An Act excluding the Women from the Crown.

During this Session, the Parliament passed an Act limiting the Succession of the Crown to the King's Male-Issue, exclusive of the Female. As this Act was repealed this same Year, and as apparently it was razed out of the Parliament Rolls, one can only guess, upon what Foundation it was built. What might, in all appearance, serve the King for Pretence to demand so extraordinary an Act, was This.

Reflection on that Act.

During the whole Course of the Dominion of the Saxon Kings, or at least since the Union of the Seven Kingdoms, we do not find a single Instance of the Descendents of the Women being called to the Succession of the Crown. From the Norman Conquest, to the time I am speaking of, we meet in the English History with two Precedents in favour of the the Women. The First is the Example of King Stephen Son of a Daughter of William the Conqueror, to which may be added at the same time, that of Matilda, Daughter of Henry I, who disputed the Crown with Stephen. The second Instance is that of Henry II, Son of Matilda, who was acknowledged for King without Opposition. These two Precedents seemed to establish the Right of the Females beyond all Dispute: And yet they had their Objections. It might be alledged that Stephen ascended the Throne purely by the Cabals of some of the Nobility, and that Henry II, received not his Crown but by Virtue of a Treaty which he extorted from his Predecessor by Force of Arms. It might moreover be objected, that as there was no express Law upon this Head, two Examples ever since the Beginning of the Monarchy could not have the Force of a Law, especially considering the Circumstances they were attended with. Thus the Right of the Women and their Issue might at least be liable to some Dispute.

(a) According to Pentamus the Nuptials of Eric with Philippa were not celebrated till the 25th of October, 1406.

1406.

When Henry IV mounted the Throne, he pretended to be the next Heir to Richard II, showing by that he made no Account of the Right of the Earl of March who was descended of the Female-Line. And indeed, supposing the Invalidity of the Women's Right, it could not be denied that Henry was nearer than the Earl of March who was set up against him. But this pretended Invalidity was a Question that had not been decided. Mean while the People were generally of Opinion that the Women had a Right to the Succession, since, without its being necessary to alledge Examples or Precedents in their Favour, it was enough that there was no Law to exclude them. Upon this Foundation the late Rebellion was rais'd, as appeared by the Manifesto of the Rebels. It is therefore very likely that in order to take away this Pretext from the Male-contents, Henry would have decided this Matter by an Act which, in excluding the Women and their Issue, seem'd to insinuate that the present King had ascended the Throne pursuant to the Customs and Laws of the Realm. But this Act, which perhaps was extorted the same way as the Subsidy, subsisted not but till the End of the Year. The

The Act is repealed next 1406.

Another for the Women.

next Parliament which met in December, made such strong Remonstrances to the King upon that Point, that he consented to have it repealed. This Parliament, not satisfied with leaving the Right of the Women in the doubtful State it might be in before, passed a new Act, whereby the Females and their Issue were establish'd in their Natural Rights. The Succession was settled upon the King's eldest Son and his Heirs without Exception, then upon his Brothers and their Issue, without excluding the Women. This Act was sign'd by the King, the House of Lords, and the Speaker in the Name of all the Commons, the 2d of December 1406, as appears by the Collection of Publick Acts.

The Precaution the King took to secure his Right by causing the First of these Acts to be passed, was extremely prejudicial to his Posterity. By that he gave Occasion for the Second, which strengthen'd the Rights of the Earl of March, and consequently of the House of York, which became Heir to that Prince.

Negotiation for delivering the Earl of Northumber-land to the King.

Whilst the Parliament, which passed the first of these Acts continued sitting, in Expectation of the King's dissolving it, Henry carried on in Scotland a secret Negotiation, about the delivering up of the Earl of Northumberland and the Lord Bardolf, who had taken Refuge there. He could not be at rest on account of the former, whose Valour, Abilities, revengeful Temper were no less known to him than his great Interest in the North. As it was to be fear'd, that being so near those Parts he would contrive some dangerous Plot, Henry believed he ought to spare no Pains to make himself easy, by securing his Person. To that End he sent an Offer to certain Scotch Lords, whose Relations and Friends were Prisoners in England, to set them at Liberty without Ransom, provided they would deliver up the Earl of Northumberland and the Lord Bardolf. This Offer was received with Joy. But as there was no concealing the Matter from the Lord Flemming who had entertained these two Lords at his House, he acquainted them with it; whereupon they retired into Wales, under the Protection of Glendour. Some time after, the Scotch Lords, vexed returns into Wales.

The Earl

at having missed their Aim, killed the Lord Flemming who was the Cause that their Friends were still detained in Prison. Afterwards his Son having revenged his Death upon some of the Murderers, this Quarrel, joined to several other Occasions of Discord which reigned among the Great Men, under the Government of a very weak Prince, raised a-bundance of Commotions in Scotland. 1406.

Robert III, of the House of the Stuarts who sat then on the Throne of Scotland, was a Prince freer from Vices than Scotland. Affairs of endowed with good Qualities. His easy Nature, or weak Capacity, had given an Opportunity to Robert his Brother Duke of Albany, to get into his Hands by Degrees the Government of the Kingdom, whilst he left the King his Brother little more than the external Badges of Royalty. His Ambition not being satisfied with a borrowed Power, he formed a Design to seize the Crown, or at least he took Measures to secure it to himself after the Death of Robert. To compass his Ends it was necessary to remove the Obstructions which he would infallibly meet with in the execution of his Designs from the Princes David and James his Nephews, the King's Sons. An Opportunity offered very quickly to get rid of the eldest. The young Prince having committed some Outrage, Complaints whereof were brought to the King, the Duke of Albany procured an Order from the King his Brother, to keep David in Confinement, till the Heat of his Passion should be somewhat abated. He executed this Order with such Rigour, that having shut up the Prince in a close Prison, he caused him to be starved to Death. How careful soever he might be to conceal this barbarous Action, Robert was informed of it: but being too weak and his Brother too potent, he durst not attempt to be revenged. The only Remedy he could apply to his Grief was to put James his second, now become his eldest Son, out of the Reach of the Snares of his treacherous Brother. With this View he resolved to have him educated at the Court of France, that he might send him out of Scotland, where he was in such imminent Danger, and accordingly put him on board a Ship in order to go by Sea. The young Prince sailing near the Coast of Norfolk. Prince James confined in the Tower of London. Act. Pub. VIII. 484.

1406. folk, and finding himself Sea-sick, went on shore to take some Rest. But no sooner was he out of his Ship, but the People of those Parts seized him and brought him to the King, who was so cruel as to confine him in the Tower. In vain did the Scotch Prince give him a Letter from the King his Father recommending his Son to him, in case any Accident should oblige him to land in his Dominions. Henry returned him no other Answer but a sorry Jest, telling him, there was no Occasion to go to Paris to learn French, he should be taught it at London. The King of Scotland died three days after he had received this bad News, and the Duke of Albany took upon him the Administration of Affairs during the Imprisonment of the young Prince, to whom the Crown was devolved.

Death of King Robert.

The French
try in vain to aid the Welsh.

This Year the French came upon the Coast of Wales with Thirty-eight Ships in order to assist Glendower. But a violent Storm, which destroyed the best Part of their Fleet, hindered them from putting their Design in Execution.

1407.
Symptoms of a new Conspiracy.

It is very likely, that the Court of France had received some Intelligence of a Conspiracy forming in England against the King; and that it was with Design to countenance it that an Army was sent to be in a readiness in Wales. But the Dispersion of the Fleet apparently caused the Project, which had not been well laid, to fall to the Ground. There were some Indications given of it in the Beginning of the Year 1407, by the Boldness certain Persons took to post up in several Places in London that Richard was living and preparing to enter the Kingdom with a powerful Army. What Inquiries soever the King could make, he was never able to discover the Authors. There was only one poor Wretch, who was employed in fixing up the Papers, that was hanged without being able or willing to tell who set him on work.

Plague at London.

This Year a terrible Plague raged at London, which swept away above thirty Thousand Inhabitants. The King not daring to stay at London whilst the Plague made such Ravages, retired to the Castle of Leeds in the County of Kent. After he had spent Part of the Summer there; he had a mind

mind to remove to another of his Seats in Norfolk; and resolving to go by Sea, he went on Board a Vessel which was followed by four more with his Baggage and Attendants. Whilst he was sailing along in Sight of Land, without any Precaution, and believing he was in no Danger, he saw himself on a sudden attacked by some French Pyrates, who took four of his Ships, that he was in himself very narrowly escaping. There was no Question but some Treachery lurked under this Accident; but it was impossible to find it out. 1406.

The King is like to be taken by Pyrates.

The famous Robert Knolles, who had signalized himself in an extraordinary Manner in the Wars with France in the Reign of Edward III, died this Year in a very advanced Age. Though born of mean Parentage, he had raised himself by his Merit, and gained a Reputation equal to that of the most illustrious Warriors. In the Beginning of this Reign, he was Seneschal of Guienne; but being at length weary of a Life of too much Hurry and Action, he retired to his Estate in Kent. There he ended his Days, after having acquired a still more solid Glory by many Acts of Piety, Charity, Munificence, some of which are still in Being at this Day *.

Death of Robert Knolles.

Henry being sensible how ill-affected his Subjects were to him, stood so in Awe of them, that ever since his Accession to the Crown, he had not dared to send any Troops into Guienne for fear of weakening himself at Home. Mean while the French taking Advantage of his Negligence, became Masters from Time to Time of several Places in that Province, by bribing the Governours. They followed in this the Maxim introduced during the War between Edward III and Philip de Valois, that Truces were Trading-Times, and the Purchase of Towns was no Breach of them. This Year the Duke of Orleans endeavoured, notwithstanding the Truce, to take Bourg and Blaye, but without Success. On the other Hand, the Duke of Burgundy had Designs of the French upon Guienne and Calais.

* He died at his Mannor of Scene-Thorp in Norfolk, and was buried with his Lady in the Body of the Church of the White-Friars, which he had newly built. He built likewise the stately Stone-Bridge at Rochester. Dugdale Vol. II. p. 412.

1407. Duke of Burgundy murders the Duke of Orleans, formed again the Design of besieging Calais; but for want of having taken due Measures, durst not go on. He complained that the Duke of Orleans had privately thrown Obstructions in his Way. This Occasion of Complaint being joined to several others, which had made him conceive a mortal Hatred against that Prince, he caused him to be assassinated this Year in November. He was so hardy as to avow his being Author of the Murder, and powerful enough to get a Pardon, though the Deceased was the King's own Brother.

Truce with Bretagne. Act. Pub. VIII. 490. Though War was not proclaimed between England and Bretagne, the Attempts which were continually making on both Sides, could not fail to produce at length an open Rupture. The Duke of Bretagne was Son of a Father who had an English Heart. But the young Duke had sucked in at the Court of France other Inclinations and Maxims. However the Death of the Duke of Orleans, and the Troubles which were in France, having made the Bretains sensible, that they might be abandoned, in Case of a Rupture with England, they thought it their wisest Way to accept of a Truce offered them by Henry. The Truce was to be for a Year only. The Bretains imagining that they should be able to see by that Time how Matters would go in France, where all Things began to be in great Confusion.

1408. A fresh Attempt of the Earl of Northumberland against the King. Henry was not ignorant of the Views of the Bretains; but however thought it for his Interest to hide his Sentiments. Ever since his Coming to the Crown, he had stuck close to this Rule, that it was better to bear with some Things in his Neighbours, than to expose himself to the Insults of his Subjects. He could not help reflecting on the irregular Means he had used to ascend the Throne. The Consideration whereof keeping him in continual Dread, he chose rather to hazard his Reputation a little, than to furnish his Domestick Enemies, by engaging in Foreign Wars, with an Opportunity to execute their ill Designs. It was not without Reason that he lived in perpetual Apprehensions upon that Score. He had still in the Earl of Northumberland an Enemy, who humbled as he was, continued tinued to be very formidable. Since that Earl and the Lord Bardolf had retired into Wales, they had never ceased contriving Means with Glendour to dethrone the King. The Welsh, who were in open War with Henry, went not privately to work in their Preparations. They strengthened their Army with great Numbers of French and Flemish Adventurers, which were drawn thither by the Prospect of the Booty promised them in England. On the other Hand, the Earl of Northumberland privately made sure of the Assistance of the People of the North, with whom he had all along great Interest, in spite of his past Disgraces. As soon as their Matters were made ready, the Earl and Bardolf returned to Scotland, from whence they entered England by the northern Counties. They were at the Head of some Scotch Troops which they had levied by the Connivance of the Duke of Albany Regent of the Kingdom. Upon their Appearing in the North, they that were ingaged before-hand, readily came and joined them, and their Army became in a few days very considerable.

1407.
He begins with Glendour.

He appears in Arms in the North.

As the King was not aware of this Insurrection, the Earl had Time to re-take the Castles which he had lost in the first Rebellion. This Success encourag'd him to enter Yorkshire. He was in hopes that when once he should be Master of that Country, nothing would hinder him from joining the Welsh, who only waited his Orders to put themselves in Motion. Upon his entering Yorkshire, he published a Manifesto, containing the Motives which had induced him to take up Arms, they were much the same with those that were published in the former Rebellions. Mean while, as the King spent a great deal of Time in Preparations, Sir Thomas Rokesby, Sheriff of York, thought it his Duty to levy some Troops in a readiness against the King's Coming, and at the same Time to put some Stop to the Progress of the Rebels. The Earl of Northumberland judging it of the last Importance to disperse the Sheriff's Forces before they should be augmented, marched towards him, in Hopes that his Approach would be sufficient to put him to flight. But he found he had an Enemy to deal with that was not so easily

He makes a Progress.

publishes a Manifesto.

The Sheriff of York raises Troops.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 525

The Earl attacks
him.

1407. ly frightened. Rokesby, though much inferior to the Earl, stood his Ground, and fought with that Bravery and Good-Fortune, that the Rebels Army was entirely routed. The Earl of Northumberland was slain on the Spot, and the Lord Bardolf taken Prisoner, but so mortally wounded, that he died in a few Days. Their Heads being sent to the King, he ordered them to be set up over London-Bridge. Thus died the Earl of Northumberland, who from being the King's great Friend, became his bitterest Enemy. It was he that had contributed the most in placing Henry on the Throne, by the Readiness wherewith he joined him at Raven-spur, whose Example drew in all the rest of the Kingdom. But afterwards he made several Attempts to wrest the Crown from him. So that it might be a Question whether he had done more for him than against him, if in an Affair of this Nature one single Rebellion did not outweigh numberless Services.

The King punishes the Rebels.

Henry being already upon the March, when he received the News of the Defeat and Death of the Earl of Northumberland, went on to York. He made some stay in that City in order to have the Rebels tried, of whom some were executed *. Others redeemed their Lives by large Sums of Money.

The Earl of Kent attacks the French Py-rates, and is slain.

ibid.
p. 542.
The Pyrates all put to the Sword

Before the King set out from London, he had ordered a Fleet to be fitted out against the French Pyrates, who for some Time had infested the Coast of England, and done great Damages to the Merchants. Edmund Holland Earl of Kent, who commanded the Fleet, went a long Time in quest of the Pyrates to no Purpose. At length, having heard that they were retired to the Coast of Bretagne, to the little Isle of Brabac, which had been excepted by Name in the Truce with the Bretains, he went and attacked them in the Town of the same Name, where they had shut themselves up. In the first Assault he received a Wound of which he died in five Days. This prevented not his Troops from continuing the Siege and taking the Town, where they put all to the Sword.

The

* The Abbot of Hales being taken fighting on the Earl's Side, was hanged. Speed, Vol. II. p. 620.

The frequent Ratifications of the Truce not hindering the French from making continual Attempts upon England, Henry was fain at length to rest contented with concluding a new separate Truce for Picardy and Guienne, from the 30th. of September 1408, to the 1st. of May 1410. Poitou was expressly included, because the French denied that Province was to be reckoned as an Appendix of Guienne. 1408.
Truce for Poitou and Guienne.
521, 557.

The Schism which commenced in 1378, by the double Election of Urban VI and Clement VII, was still on Foot to the great Scandal of Christendom. Urban dying in 1390, the Cardinals of his Party had chosen in his Room Boniface IX, who at first seemed very much inclined to put an End to the Schism. Whereupon the Court of France laboured heartily to bring Clement to be of the same Mind. But as he proved inflexible, the University of Paris was ordered to meet, and it was decided that in Order to put an End to the Schism, one of these three Ways was absolutely necessary. The First was, That the two Popes should resign. The Second, That they should agree upon two Umpires to decide their Difference. The Third, That the Determination should be referred to a General Council. This Resolution being communicated to Clement, it vexed him to that Degree, that he died quickly after in 1394. As soon as the King of France had notice of his Death, he wrote to the Cardinals, desiring them not to proceed to a new Election. But as they guessed at the Contents of his Letter, before they opened it they chose the Cardinal of Luna an Arragonian, who took the Name of Benedict XIII. Before the Election, they had all made a solemn Oath, that whoever was chosen, he should renounce the Papacy, in case it should be deemed necessary for the Good of Christendom. But Benedict being elected, dispensed with the Oath he had taken when a Cardinal. On the other Hand, Boniface IX dying 1404, his Cardinals had chosen Innocent VII, and he dying likewise the next Year, they had elected Angelo Corario a Venetian, who had assumed the Name of Gregory XII. A brief Account of the Schism.

1408.

It would be too tedious to relate all the Evasions Benedict XIII and Gregory XII used to shift off the Resignation which each of them had sworn to make. They would both fain have it believed that their Intentions were good, and yet they started continually fresh Obstacles to the Accommodation all Christendom wished for. In fine, the Christian Princes, tired with the shuffling Tricks of the two Popes, found Means to gain the Cardinals of both Sides, who in their own Name summoned a General Council at Pisa upon the 25th of March 1409.

1409.
Council of Pisa.

Act. Pub.
VIII. 567.

Alexander
V. elected.

King's Proclamation in his Favour.
p. 600.

The Progress of the Lollards alarm the Clergy.

Wickliff's Books condemned at Oxford.

The Council being assembled, the two Popes were cited; and as they did not think fit to appear, they were pronounced Hereticks, and guilty of Perjury, and deprived of their Dignity. At the same Time Power was given to the Cardinals to elect a Pope. They pitched upon Peter de Candia, who stiled himself Alexander V. Before the holding of the Council, Henry had writ to Gregory to admonish him to comply readily with the Method of Resignation. But his Letter having no Effect, as soon as he had notice of Alexander's Election, he issued a Proclamation, enjoining all his Subjects to acknowledge the new Pope. It was believed that the scandalous Schism, which lasted above thirty Years, was at an End; but the Obstinacy of Benedict spun it out some Years longer.

How scandalous soever this Schism might be, it did not beget in the Clergy of England so great Uneasiness as Wickliff's Doctrine. Although during this Reign the Lollards were used with great Severity, yet their Numbers continually increased. There were even at Oxford Doctors that publickly defended the novel Opinions as well in their Disputations as in their Writings. The Bishops being very much alarmed at it, obtained of the King an Order to the University to meet in Convocation, and examine the Books of Wickliff. As the major Part were still attached to the old Doctrine, his Books were condemned, and the University published a Decree, forbidding all her Members upon Pain of Degradation to preach or teach the Doctrine therein contained.

This

This Year the Truce with Bretagne was prolonged to the 1st of July 1411.

1409.

Truce with Bretagne.

1410.

Troubles in France advantagious to Henry.

Henry could not be sure of enjoying any Tranquillity as long as France was free from Troubles. From thence proceeded the Rise of all the Commotions, as well of his own Subjects as of the Welsh and Scotch. The War which broke out in that Kingdom between the Houses of Orleans and Burgundy, turned greatly to the Advantage of England. In the first Place, Castile and Scotland the more readily concluded a Truce with Henry. Then the Welsh receiving no further Aid from thence, found at length that their pretended Prince was very far from being able to perform what he had promised them, and began by degrees to desert him. Lastly, Henry had this private Advantage by it, that he became more absolute at Home, since he had nothing to fear from his Enemies Abroad. Though he had caused Richard to be deposed, for aiming at arbitrary Power contrary to the Laws, yet he himself made some Steps, which plainly showed he would not have been sorry to have it in his Power to govern with an absolute Authority. This was chiefly manifest in the Elections of Members of Parliament: By the Direction of the Court, certain Artifices were practised, as rendered the Freedom of Voting of no Effect, seeing the Sheriffs took the Liberty to return such Representatives as had not a Majority of Votes. This is a Thing of so fatal a Consequence, that one may venture to affirm, the Liberty of the English will no longer have a Being, than whilst the Privilege of freely electing their Representatives in Parliament stands inviolated. If once the Sovereign comes to chuse what Representatives he pleases, the Bounds of the Royal Authority will in the end be so vastly enlarged, that nothing but the mere Shadow of Liberty will remain. Of this we have seen a remarkable Instance in the Reign of Richard II. And it may farther be affirmed, that all the Kings of England which have enjoyed a more absolute Power than the rest, got it by this Way, I mean, by procuring such Persons to be elected as were devoted to them. When a Parliament is made up of such Members, it is no longer the King that is charged with

Henry begins to break in upon the Parliament's Privileges.

1410.

with the Incroachments made upon the People's Liberty; but it is the Nation itself that voluntarily runs into Slavery: And if afterwards They are desirous to throw off their Chains, there is no Remedy to be had but by Force of Arms; and hence, by the way, has sprung the greatest Part of the Civil Wars, which have been so often kindled in England. The Parliament which met in January 1410, taking into Consideration the Consequence of the Steps the King had made, in order to over-rule the Elections, believed the redressing that Abuse required their first Care. Accordingly, in the Beginning of the Session they presented a Bill to the King, whereby it was enacted, that the Sheriffs, who should be guilty of making false Returns, should be fined a Hundred Pounds Sterling for every such Offence. The King would very fain have shifted off this Act, but as he could not do it without laying himself too open, and besides, having a Design to demand a Subsidy, he gave the Royal Assent to it.

Act against false Returns.

The King demands a Subsidy.

Petition of the Commons against the Clergy.

Upon the passing this Act, the King demanded an Aid of Money of the Commons, who took occasion from thence to renew the Instances they had formerly made with regard to the Clergy. Wickliff's Doctrine had gained so much ground, that the Majority of the House of Commons leaned that way. Thus biassed, the Commons presented to the King two Petitions, one against the Clergy, the other in Behalf of the Lollards. In the first they set forth, that the Clergy made an ill use of their Riches, and laid out their Incomes in a very different Manner from the Intent of the Donors: That their Revenues were excessive, and consequently it was necessary to lessen them: That so many Estates might easily be seized as would serve to provide for ~~the~~ Hundred and fifty Earls, at the Rate of Three Thousand Marks a Year each; Fifteen Hundred Barons at a Hundred Marks each; Six Thousand two Hundred Knights at Forty Marks; and a Hundred Hospitals at a Thousand Marks: That by this Means the Kingdom would be in a better State of Defence, the Poor more amply provided for, and the Clergy more mindful of the Duties of their Function.

In the second Petition the Commons prayed that the Statute enacted against the Lollards in the seventh Year of this Reign, might either be repealed, or at least altered in some of its Branches.

4014.
Another in favour of the Lollards.

If the Parliament which first proposed the lessening the Revenues of the Clergy, was stiled the unlearned, it may well be supposed, this met with no better Appellation. The Name of Lollard and Heretical was plentifully bestowed, and the Clergy considered the Petition as tending to cut up Religion by the Roots. This they endeavoured to insinuate to the King with all the aggravating Circumstances which Parties concerned are capable of displaying on such an Occasion. It is hard to know whether the King was of their Mind; but however, he declared that he had the Interest of the Church no less at Heart than the Clergy themselves. After the Death of the Earl of Northumberland, there was never a Lord in the Kingdom which could give him any Uneasiness; and though the People were not over-pleased, Henry was very sensible that of themselves they would never be induced to rebel, unless spurred on by others: So that his Business was to keep fair with the Clergy, who alone had it in their Power to stir up the People, especially upon so plausible a Pretence as the stripping the Church of her Lands. For this Reason, he answered the Commons somewhat sharply, that he neither could nor would consent to their Petitions, and expressly forbid them to meddle any more with the Church's Concerns. As for the Lollards, he replied, that far from permitting that the Statute against them should be repealed, he wished rather the Rigour of it was heightened, that Heresy might be entirely rooted out of the Kingdom.

The King rejects the two Petitions.

The Commons missing their Aim, were contented with moving, that at least Clerks convicted of any Crime, should not be tried in the Ecclesiastical Courts: They alledged as a Reason that daily Experience showed, Clerks by that Means always escaped the Punishment they had deserved. What the Commons demanded was no less reasonable at that time, than in the Reign of Henry II, when that Prince and all the Peers of the Realm disputed that Point so

Another
Petition against the Clergy rejected.

1410. stoutly with Thomas Becket and Pope Alexander III. But Henry apprehensive of being involved in the like Troubles as Henry II. was liable to, refused to give his Assent to this Bill. On the contrary, he affected to show an extraordinary Zeal for the Welfare of the Church, and to take such Steps as he thought most agreeable to the Clergy. Tho' it cannot be doubted but that Wickliff's Doctrine was the real Cause of the Motions made by the House of Commons, yet the King was pleased to let them see how far he was from countenancing them, by signing a Warrant for the burning of one Thomas Badby. The Prince of Wales had a mind to be present at the Execution, and, as the poor Wretch gave sensible Signs of the Torture he endured, ordered the Fire to be removed, and made him a Promise of a Pension for Life, provided he would recant. But Badby being come to himself, refused to comply with this Offer, and suffered Death with an heroick Courage.

The King orders a Lollard to be burnt. Walsing. p. 378.

The Commons are offended, and refuse the King's Demand.

He obtains a Subsidy by a kind of Force.

The Duke of Burgundy forms a Design to besiege Calais.

The Commons looked on this Execution as an Insult, and as a great Aggravation of the Refusal they had lately met with. Accordingly, when the King demanded that a Power might be granted him to levy every Year a certain Subsidy *, though the Parliament should not sit, the Bill was resolutely thrown out. The Commons would have even refused to grant him Money for his necessary Occasions, if the same Method which succeeded so well once before, had not been taken to constrain them to it: That is, he prolonged the Sessions till he obtained what he wanted. It appeared plainly, that the Earl of Northumberland was no longer living; that the Troubles in Wales were almost at an end; and that France was not in a Condition to be feared, otherwise he would never have ventured to treat the Commons in so haughty a Manner.

Notwithstanding the ill Posture of Affairs in France, the Duke of Burgundy resumed his Design of besieging Calais; but with the same Success as before. All he had prepared at St. Omer for the carrying on the Siege, being burnt to Ashes

* A Tenth on the Clergy, and a Fifteenth on the Laity. Cotton's Abridgment, p. 472.

Ashes either by Accident, or by Means of a private Emissary, set on purpose by the Governour of Calais, this Project vanished into Smoke like the former ones. The French Historians make no mention of this Attempt. However it seems, by the King's Precaution in sending the Prince of Wales to Calais, at that very time he had received some private Intelligence of it. Be that as it will, the Truce with France, for Guienne and picardy, was prolonged for some Months.

1410.

Truce with France prolonged.

This Year Robert de Humphreville, Vice-Admiral of England, entered the Gulf of Edinburgh, and daily landing his Men, now in one place, then in another, carried off a prodigious Booty*.

The English ravage Scotland.

The whole Year 1411. was spent in the several Negotiations, which ended at length in prolonging the Truce with France for five Years, with Castile till February 1413, and with Bretagne for ten Years.

1411.
Truce prolonged.
Act. Pub.
VIII. 710.

These Negotiations need not to have any thing more said about them, because we have already seen the Occasion of them. But the Negotiation this Year with the Duke of Burgundy, requires a little more insisting upon. To that end it will be necessary to explain as briefly as possible, how Matters then stood in France, on which depends a good Part of the Occurrences of his and the two following Reigns.

We have seen how John Duke of Burgundy assassinated the Duke of Orleans, Brother of King Charles VI, and that he avowed the Fact, and had Credit enough to procure a Pardon. After which, he went into his Dominions in Flanders, with design to restore to the Bishoprick of Liege, the Brother of his Dutcheß, whom the People of Liege had expelled. Whilst he was making Preparations for this War, the Dutcheß of Orleans in Company with her three Sons, of whom Charles the Eldest was not above fifteen Years old, came and casting her self at the Feet of the King her Brother-in-Law, demanded Justice for the Death of her Husband. Though the Duke of Burgundy had

Affairs of France.

* He brought away so much Corn, &c. that he brought down the Prices of Things, and thence was called Mind-Market.

1411. obtained a Pardon, his Adversaries taking advantage of his Absence, had Interest enough to have it revoked, and to cause him to be pronounced Enemy of the State. He was then marching to the Relief of Mastricht, where the Men of Liege held their Bishop besieged. Upon his Approach, they quitted the Siege: but being afterwards informed that the Duke had but sixteen Thousand Men, they resolved to go and attack him. Though their Army was three times as strong as the Duke's, they were put to Rout with the Loss of thirty Thousand Men. The Duke's Victory alarmed his Enemies in France to such a Degree, that not thinking themselves safe at Paris, where the Duke had many Friends, they retired to Tours, and took the King along with them. The victorious Duke preparing his Affairs in France to the War against the Men of Liege, who were pretty well humbled, put himself immediately at the Head of Four Thousand Horse, and came to Paris where he was received in Triumph. Upon his Arrival, he got the People of Paris to send Deputies to the King, praying him to return to the City. Charles, who was then in one of his Intervals, thought it not proper in the present Juncture to espouse the Side of the Enemies of the Duke of Burgundy. He repaired to Paris as he was desired, and forthwith put several considerable Persons upon making up Matters between the Duke of Burgundy, and the Sons of the Duke of Orleans, the which was brought about, though with much Difficulty. The Dutches of Orleans died with Grief, to see the Murderer of her Husband triumphant; and the young Duke of Orleans, who was then but in his sixteenth Year, found himself obliged to be reconciled with his most mortal Foe. From thenceforward, the Duke of Burgundy held the Reins of the Government, the King, who relapsed often into his Fits of Madness, being too weak to be at the Helm himself.

Act. Pub.
VIII. 698.
699.

In the mean while, Henry, who had always in view the making a Peace with France, formed a Design to marry the Prince of Wales with one of the Daughters of the Duke of Burgundy, whom he saw so firmly established.

But

But whilst he was carefully thinking how to bring about his Project, such Alterations happened in France as made him perceive that Alliance was not so certain a Means as he had imagined to attain his Ends. The Dukes of Berri, Orleans, Alençon, Bretagne and the Earls of Clermont and Armagnac, having met at Guienne in August 1410, entered into a League against the Duke of Burgundy, and shortly after advanced near Paris. The Duke, having the King in his Power, opposed them with equal Forces which made them sensible that the Execution of their Designs depended on a Battle, the Issue whereof could not but be doubtful. In all appearance, France it self would be ruined by a Battle which would be destructive to the Kingdom on which side soever Victory inclined, unless Means were found to accommodate Matters between the contending Parties. It was concluded, that the Duke of Burgundy should depart from Paris, that the confederate Princes should not enter there, and that none of the Heads of the two Parties should ever come to Court, unless ordered thither by Letters under the Great-Seal.

The Duke of Burgundy punctually observing this Agreement, retired into the Low-Countries; but the Duke of Orleans and the rest of his Party were not so scrupulous. After they had disbanded their Troops, they levied others, and approached Paris in hopes of enriching themselves with the Plunder of the Metropolis which stood firm to Burgundy. The Duke finding himself thus fooled, made an Alliance with the King of England, who believing it his Interest to support him, sent him a considerable Body of Troops. With these Succours the Duke marching into France and passing through the Enemies Quarters, who were blocking up Paris, entered the City amidst the Acclamations of the People on the 30th of October 1411. From this time began the forming of the two powerful Factions of Orleans and Burgundy, the first of which received afterwards the Name of the Armagnacs, from the Earl of Armagnac, who became their Head.

Henry aids the Duke of Burgundy.

Whilst

1411.
Parliament in England.

Act of Indemnity, Glendour is excepted.

His Affairs go to decay.

Whilst France was embroiled in Troubles and Confusion, the Parliament of England meeting about the End of this Year, petitioned the King for a General Pardon for his Subjects. Henry readily complied with their Request excepting only Glendour and his Adherents. This plainly shows that Glendour was still living, though most Historians say he died in 1409. It is true, after the Death of the Earl of Northumberland, his Affairs were gone to decay. The Welsh seeing he was little able to perform what he had promised, had by degrees deserted him. He was even apprehensive, they would make some attempt upon his Life, or deliver him up to the King. His Fears having induced him to conceal himself, he passed the Residue of his Days in some unknown Place. So that it is no wonder that the Time of his Death is doubtful. However that he lived till the Year 1417. is certain.

1412.
Continuation of the Troubles in France.

Henry thinks of taking advantage of them.

The Affairs of France were embroiled more and more by the mutual Hatred of the Two Factions, who made no Scruple of sacrificing the Good of the Publick to their private Animosity. Hitherto Henry had but too much Reason to dread some Mischief from that Quarter. If the Dissentions of the Princes of the Blood had not hindered those that were at the Helm of Affairs, during the King's Illness, from effectually supporting the Male-contents in England, it is exceeding probable that he would have been driven to great Streights. But when he saw the Animosity of the two Factions carried to the utmost Height, his Fears entirely vanished. He even began to think of Means of reaping some Benefit from the Commotions in France, as the French had scarce ever failed of taking an Advantage of the Insurrections in England. In this Point, one Side made no more Conscience of breaking the Truce than the other.

The Faction of Orleans sue to him for Aid.

It was not long before Henry met with the Opportunity he was seeking. The French themselves offered him as fair a one as he could wish. The Dukes of Berri, Orleans, Bourbon, Alençon, the Earl of Armagnac and the Lord d' Albret, Heads of one of the Factions, finding they were unable to withstand the Duke of Burgundy, who had the King

King and all the Royal Family in his Power, came to a Resolution to strengthen themselves with the Assistance of the King of England. But as they were not ignorant that the Duke of Burgundy had been before-hand with them, in making an Alliance with Henry, they thought it necessary to break that Alliance, by offering such Terms as were capable of making Henry fall from the Engagements he had entered into with their Enemy. To that End they met at Bourges where they agreed upon the Offers they should make him, which done, they sent Deputies to treat with him.

1412.

Hitherto the Duke of Burgundy had shifted off Henry's Proposal of matching the Prince of Wales with one of his Daughters. Apparently he had entertained other Views: But upon his being informed what was carrying on in England, he thought proper to press in his Turn the Conclusion of the Marriage. Henry pretended to listen with pleasure to his Sollicitation; but it was with Intent to procure the better Terms from the Orleans-Faction with whom he designed to make an Alliance. And indeed the Deputies having Notice of this Negotiation, insisted no farther upon any Article, but concluded the Treaty just as Henry would have it, on the 18th of May 1412.

The Duke of Burgundy tries to break the Measures of his Enemies. Act. Pub. VIII. 721.

By this Treaty the Confederate Princes were bound,
I. to give up to the King of England about fifteen hundred Towns, Castles or Bayliwicks which they had in Guienne or in Poitou.

Treaty between Henry and the Orleans Faction. p. 738.

II. To conquer for him what remained of these two Provinces in the Hands of the French, and to restore to him Guienne and its Appurtenancies, in the same State and Extent as his Predecessors had formerly enjoyed it.

III. The King allowed, that the Duke of Berry should hold Poitou for his Life, on Condition he did him Homage and delivered up Poitiers, Niort and Lusignan: As for the Rest of the fortified Towns in that Province, he should place such Governours in them as would bind themselves by Oath to give them up after his Death to the King of England. The Duke of Orleans was to have the Dutchy of 1412.

of Angoulême upon the same Terms, and the Earl of Armagnac, certain Castlewards in Guienne.

IV. The King was bound on his Part, to lend the Princes an Aid of a Thousand Men at Arms, and three Thousand Archers, who were to go to Blois where they should be received by the Princes and paid in Hand according to the Pay agreed upon.

Prince Thomas commands the Succours.
p. 743.
is made D. of Clarence.
p. 757.

The Treaty being ratified, Henry gave the Command of the Succours to Thomas his second Son, whom a few days after he created Duke of Clarence. He sent with him in this Expedition the Duke of York, and Thomas Beaufort High-Admiral of England. These Succours sat out in July, and it appears by several Pieces in the Collection of Publick Acts, that the King was preparing to go in Person to Guienne, in order to take Possession of what had been promised him.

He arrives, and finds a Peace concluded.

But whilst they were employed in England in getting ready these Troops, Affairs in France had taken a new Turn. The Duke of Burgundy improving the Advantages he had over his Enemies, kept them close besieged in Bourges, and had brought the King along with him. Though the Besieged made a vigorous Defense in Hopes of the Succours which were coming from England, they would have found it perhaps a hard Matter to hold out, if the Duke of Burgundy had not thought proper to make an Offer of Peace. He was afraid of the Arrival of the English Troops, and the Confederates had reason to apprehend they would not come soon enough. These different Fears having rendered both Sides more tractable, the Peace tendered by the Duke of Burgundy was accepted without Hesitation, and at the same time proclaimed.

In the mean Time the Duke of Clarence having landed in Normandy, was advancing towards Blois with all possible Expedition, without committing any Hostilities upon the Countries he marched through. But when he was informed that the Confederates had concluded a Peace, he considered France as an Enemy's Country, and made great Ravages as he passed along. It was the Business of the Duke of Orleans Head of the Faction which had drawn him into France, to see to make him Satisfaction. But as he had no Money to pay what was already become due to the English, he was forced to give him the Earl of Angoulême his Brother in Hostage. On the other hand, the Duke of Clarence, finding himself in the Midst of an Enemy's Country with a small Number of Troops, and not without apprehension that the two Parties would join against him, did not think fit to stand off. He only stipulated that he should have leave to lead his Troops into Guienne, where they served to recover some Places by the Help of the Earl of Armagnac and the Lord d' Albret, who were not pleased with the Peace.
of

1412.

He retires into Gui-
enne.

This Affair being over, Henry enjoyed a profound Tranquillity. He had nothing to fear from France, which by intestine Divisions was become unable to hurt him. The Welsh sought only to make Peace; and the Regent of Scotland content with seeing the King his Nephew in the Hands of the English, minded only his own private Concerns. In fine, the Male-contentments which might be left in England being no longer supported by foreign Princes, sat down in quiet. Henry made a good Use of these peaceable Times, in wiping out the ill Impressions which his Severity and Proceedings with respect to the Parliament, had made in the Minds of his Subjects. He affected Popularity, and endeavoured by all Sorts of Means to convince the World, he thought of nothing less than the stretching the Prerogative Royal. His Endeavours were crowned with such Success, that in spite of the Rigor he had exercised upon his Enemies, and the many Rebuffs he had given the House of Commons, he was deemed a Prince of Generosity, Mildness, and Moderation. What was heretofore considered as an Effect of his cruel and revengeful Temper, was now very readily attributed to pure Necessity and the Circumstances of his Affairs: It was doubtless the latter Behaviour of this Prince which made Historians give him such Commendations, as we find no Grounds for in the former Actions of his Life. This Instance shows how easy it is for a Sovereign to efface the hard Thoughts his Subjects

Henry enjoys a profound Peace.

1412. shall have entertained of him, provided he has Sense or Good-Fortune enough to perswade the World he sincerely intends to reform his Conduct.

Excesses of the Prince of Wales.

Whilst Henry was endeavouring to regain his Reputation, which had been some what sullied since his Accession to the Throne, the Prince of Wales was entirely destroying His, by daily abandoning himself to Riot and Debauchery. Though he was naturally of a Great and Generous Spirit, he suffered himself to be corrupted by Persons who, to serve their own Ends, flattered his vicious Passions, and diverted him from the Paths of Virtue. His Court was the Receptacle of Libertines, Debauchees Buffoons, Parasites and others of the like Stamp. Nothing was talked of but the riotous and extravagant Pranks of the Prince or his Companions. Such a Behaviour in a Prince who was one Day to sit on the Throne, made People very thoughtful, who could not help dreading the Consequences. However, in the midst of these Apprehensions, a Ray of Hope was seen to shine, in an Instance of Moderation given by the Prince, when there was the least Prospect of any such thing. One of his Favorite-Companions having been arraigned for Felony before the Chief-Justice, he resolved to be present at the Trial, with design to over-awe the Judge.

He gives a Judge a Blow on the Face.

But his Presence not having prevented the Criminal from being condemned, he was so transported with Passion that he struck the Judge over the Face. The Chief-Justice thus affronted, weighing the Consequences of such an Action, without regarding the Quality of the Offender, commanded him to be arrested on the Spot and committed to Prison. Then was seen, contrary to the Expectations of All, the Prince quiet as a Lamb, submitting without the least Murmur to the Judge's Sentence, and suffering himself to be led to Prison without Resistance, like a mere private Person.

The King grows Suspicious of the Prince.

The Courage of the Judge and the Modesty of the Prince were equally pleasing to the King. Nevertheless Henry, who was excessively jealous of his Crown, could not help giving ear to some People who intimated to him that his Son had ill Designs against him. The Thoughts of this making him extremely uneasy, he would perhaps have been carried to some extravagant Action, in order to avert the Danger which he imagined hung over his Head, had not the Prince took Care betimes to remove his Suspicions. As soon as he was informed of the King his Father's Thoughts of him, he sent and desired a private Audience; and having obtained it, he cast himself at his Feet and said, "Sir, I am told that you have entertained a Suspicion of me injurious to my Honour, and to the Reverence and Veneration I have for your Person. It is true, I freely own it, I have been guilty of some intemperate Sallies which deserve your Indignation. But I never had the least Thought of attempting any Thing against your Person or Government. They that dare charge me with so monstrous a Crime, seek only to disturb your Quiet and mine. It is in order to clear myself of this Imputation that I have taken the Liberty to come and throw my self at your Feet, humbly intreating you to cause all my Actions to be as narrowly and closely examined, as if I was the meanest of your Subjects. I am ready to undergo this strict Scrutiny, well knowing you will be fully satisfied of my Innocence". The King seeing with what Frankness the Prince offered to vindicate himself, grew perfectly easy upon his Account, and restored him to Favour.
of

1412.

He vindicates himself.

In the Beginning of the Year 1413, Henry was seized with a Distemper, which in three Months Time laid him in his Grave. Mezerai says, it was the Leprosy. Others affirm it was a sort of Apoplexy, which had frequent Returns, and threw him into Fits which took away his Senses. Be this as it will, his Distemper, which came upon him at several Times, lasted near three Months, and then killed him. A certain Person having formerly told him that he should dye at Jerusalem, he called to Mind the Prediction, and verily believed that God would make use of him as his Instrument to wrest that City out of the Hands of the Infidels. Thus perswaded, he fancied his Death was not so nigh, and thought it his Duty to dedicate the Remainder of his Days to that glorious Expedition. Accord-

1413.

The King is seized with a dangerous Distemper.

1413.
He takes the Cross to go to Jerusalem.

He always kept the Crown on his Pillow.

ingly he took the Cross; and having called a great Council, communicated his Design to them, and ordered all Things to be got ready with Speed for his Voyage. But presently after the Returns of his Distemper being more frequent than usual, he found that far from being able to undertake an Expedition of that Nature, he ought to employ all his Thoughts in preparing for Death. The Fear he had always been in of losing his Crown by Reason of the many Attempts to wrest it from him, increased with his Years. Every Time he went to Bed, he ordered it to be laid on his Pillow, least any one should seize it before he was dead. One Day being fallen into a Fit, which was so strong upon him, that all thought he had resigned his last Breath, the Prince of Wales took up the Crown and carried it away. Soon after the King recovering his Senses, and missing the Crown, asked what was become of it. Being told the Prince had taken it, he sent for him, and asked him whether he had a Mind to rob him of his Royalty even before his Death. The Prince replied, He never had any such Thoughts, but believing him dead, he had taken the Crown as his lawful Heir, and the only Person that had a Right to claim it. Nevertheless he thanked God he saw him again recovered, and wished with all his Heart he might long live to wear it himself. At the same Time he went and fetched it and laid it in its Place.

The King's last Fit.

He is carried into the Jerusalem-Chamber.

His last Instructions to his Successor

Henry's last Fit seized him in St. Edward's Chapel as he was at his Prayers before that Saint's Shrine. He was carried to the Abbot of Westminster's Lodgings which were nearer than his own. Where coming to himself, and finding himself in a strange Place, he asked where he was. They told him at the Abbot of Westminster's, in a Chamber called Jerusalem. These Words bringing to his Remembrance the Prediction which had formerly been told him, he laid aside all Thoughts but those of Death. Before he expired, he sent for the Prince his eldest Son, and gave him many excellent Instructions; amidst which he could not forbear showing some Doubts concerning his Right to the Crown he had wore. He told him also, he was afraid the Duke of Clarence his Brother would give him some Disturbance Disturbance in the Possession of the Throne. It is not known, whether these Fears were grounded upon the restless Temper of his second Son, or whether he had entered into some Engagements with him, at the Time he had conceived a Suspicion of his eldest. Be this as it will, the Prince made Answer, that being his lawful Heir, he would endeavour to keep the Crown by the same Methods he had himself preserved it during his Life. As for the Duke of Clarence, if he behaved as he ought, he should always find in him a kind Brother; but if he pretended to do otherwise, he knew how to make him return to his Duty. The King said nothing more, except that he recommended him to the Protection of Heaven. A few Moments after he He dies; breathed his last, on the 20th of March 1413, in the Forty-sixth Year of his Age, having reigned thirteen Years, five Months, and one and twenty Days *.

Historians for the most Part have endeavoured to give Character of this Prince an Idea which in my Opinion suits not with of Henry him. They speak with Praise of his Mildness, Clemency, IV. Generosity, Valour, and abundance of other good Qualities, which shine brighter in their Writings than in his Actions. If he had gained some Reputation whilst a private Person, it does not appear that he did any Thing to increase or maintain it, after he came to the Throne. His distinguishing Character was an extreme Jealousy for the Crown which he had acquired by Ways not approved of by all the World, and for the Preservation whereof he had shed a Torrent of noble Blood. The Death of Richard II will be an indelible Stain to his Memory, supposing the Usurping the Throne could be justified. In short, he performed nothing remarkable which can afford proper Matter for Panegyrick. His Expeditions into Scotland and Wales have nothing in them which can redound to his Honour. If he happily got clear of all the Conspiracies which were formed against him, it was chiefly owing to the Mayor of Cirencester, the Sheriff of Yorkshire, and the Earl of Westmoreland.

* His Body was conveyed to Canterbury, and there solemnly buried.

1413.

moreland. The Battle of Shrewsbury wherein he vanquished young Percy, is the only notable Action in his whole Reign. His continual Fears of Insurrections, caused him to let slip several Opportunities of humbling France, and recovering the Provinces his Predecessors had lost. He even suffered many Insults from the French, Scots, Welsh, and Breains, without showing much Relentment. In fine, he employed all his Thoughts in preserving his Crown, and avoiding all Occasions which might put it in any Hazard. This prudent Policy ought to be the chief, if not the sole Theme of his Commendation, as it was the sole Motive of his Actions, wherein nothing appears to render him eminent. Though he had caused Richard II to be deposed for usurping an absolute Power, he plainly showed by his Conduct, that he had not so great an Aversion for that Crime as he pretended when it was his Interest to display it in its blackest Colours. It is true, towards the latter End of his Life, he seemed to have formed a Resolution to follow Maxims more conformable to the Nation's Liberties. But God was not pleased to allow him much Time to show the Effects of this good Resolution.

When I consider the excessive Commendations bestowed upon this Prince, I cannot forbear suspecting, that the Glory of having been the first Barner of Hereticks, and the Protection he afforded the Clergy against the Attempts of the House of Commons, were the main Springs of all these Praises. It is well known, the Ecclesiasticks are as zealous in praising their Abettors, as they are in blackening such as are not in their Interests.

Persons of Note.

During this Reign the famous Robert Knolles, William Wickham * Bishop of Winchester, and Richard Whittington Mayor

William of Wickham.

* So called from Wickham in Hampshire, where he was born in 1324. His Father's Name was John Perrot. After he had been bred at Winchester and Oxford, he returned to his Patron Nicholas Wedal, who had been at the Charge of his Education. He afterwards became known to Edward III, and having a Genius for Architecture, he was made Surveyor of the King's Buildings. His Direction for rebuilding Windsor-Castle gave great Satisfaction, and occasioned his Promotion at Court, where he passed through the Offices of Secretary of

Mayor * of London, were eminent for Works of Charity and useful Foundations. 1314.

Geoffrey Chaucer and John Gower, two famous Poets that flourished in this Reign, are generally looked upon as the first Reformers of the English Tongue.

Henry had by Mary Bohun Daughter of the Earl of Hereford, four Sons and two Daughters, namely, Henry his Successor, Thomas Duke of Clarence, John Duke of Bedford, and Hampbrey, who was created Duke of Gloucester by Henry V, his Brother. Blanch, the eldest of his Daughters, was married to Lewis Barbatus Elector Palatine, and Philippa his Second was Wife of Eric King of Denmark and Norway. Henry IV's Issue.

of State, Privy-Seal, &c. He was preferred to the See of Winchester in 1367, and soon after made Lord Chancellor of England. 'Tis said being represented to the King as a Man of no Learning, and not fit for a Bishoprick, he told the King that what he wanted in Learning himself, he would supply with being the Founder of Learning. Accordingly he began the Building of New-College in Oxford, and laid the first Stone himself, March 5. 1379. It was finished in seven Years. In 1387, on the 26th of March, he likewise laid in Person the first Stone of his College at Winchester, which he designed as a Nursery for that at Oxford. Upon this Foundation he settled an Estate for a Warden, ten Fellows, two Schoolmasters, and seventy Scholars. He died in the Fourth Year of Henry IV, aged 80 Years, and lies buried in St. Swithin's Church in Winchester, in a stately Monument of his own erecting in his Life-Time. New-College founded.

* Among other Things he built Newgate in 1420, above half of St. Bartholomew's-Hospital in West-Smithfield, and the Library in Grty-Friars, now called Christ's-Hospital.

King Henry IV instituted the Dutchy-Court in Honour of the House of Lancaster, to the end the Lands belonging to the Dutchy might in all following Times be distinguished from the Lands of the Crown.

The End of the Reign of H E N R Y IV.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND.

S E C T. II.

14. HENRY V, Sirnamed of MONMOUTH.

HENRY
V.
1473.
March 20.

HENRY IV not having had the Good-Fortune to be beloved by the English, his Death was not much regretted. The Clergy alone lamented his Loss, because in his Reign they had met with great Favour and Protection. But the rest of the People easily forgot a Prince, who after his coming to the Crown had done nothing memorable, and had shed more of his Subjects Blood than of the Enemies of the State. The very Peace the English enjoyed during the whole Course of his Reign, was not grateful to them. War would have seemed to them more beneficial, seeing a fairer Opportunity to recover what they had lost in France, had never offered. So that in Hopes that the Prince his Son would give new Life to the Glory of the English Name, which seemed seemed as it were buried in Oblivion ever since the Reign of Edward III, they joyfully beheld him succeeding a Father from whom there was no room to expect any great Matters, supposing his Reign had been longer. At the present Juncture, England stood in need of an active and Warlike King, who knew how to take Advantage of the Com-motions in France. On the other Hand, War was become necessary to dispel the ill Humours spread over the King-dom in the late Reign.

Henry of Monmouth, so called from the Place of his Birth, was exactly of the Temper the English wished him. He was naturally of an elevated and enterprising Genius. For which Reason the King his Father had always kept him at a distance from Affairs, his elevation of Mind being but too apt to breed Suspicion in a Prince so mistrustful as he. He had been a Student in Queen's-College in Oxford, under the Tuition of the Bishop of Winchester his Uncle, Chancellor of that University. Here it was that in his tender Years the Principles of Honour and Virtue were so care-fully imprinted in his Mind, that they could never after be effaced. In his very Youth he showed a strong Inclination for War. The which increasing with his Years, the King his Father thought proper to indulge it. At eighteen Years of Age, he commanded an Army against the Welsh, and gave them two Overthrows. But his Victories were of infinite Prejudice to him. The King his Father excessively jealous of his Authority, and dreading the Consequences of so noble a setting out, considered his Son's Reputation as likely one Day to become destructive of his Quiet. The Thoughts of this making him uneasy, he removed him from all War-like, as he had done from all Civil Employments, for fear it should be out of his Power to check his Flight when once he should take Wing. Reduced to a State of Idleness, the Prince naturally active, sought how to employ himself. Unluckily for him, by the Instigation of some about him, and perhaps by the Direction of the King his Father, he ran into dishonourable Courses, and abandoned himself to Excesses, very unbecoming his Birth and injuri-1413.

Education of Henry V.His warlike Intentions.Jealousy of Henry IV. against his Son.Cause of the Prince's mild Coun-ses.

1413.

ous to his Reputation *. In spite of all this, his good Disposition failed not to break out upon certain Occasions. The Moderation he showed in suffering himself to be led to Prison by Order of the Judge whom he had affronted, was a clear Evidence that Seed of Vittue were not wholly destroyed in his Mind by sensual Pleasures. Accordingly the King his Father, who was not ignorant of his Talents, was afraid of him, though one would think that a Prince drowned as it were in Pleasures, should not give him much Uneasiness. However, the People were not prejudiced against him. It is true, the Excesses he was guilty of now and then, might give them room to fear they should one Day be unhappy under his Government. But upon certain Occasions they beheld in him Tokens of Generosity, Virtue, Greatness of Soul, which afforded them the Prospect of a happy Change in his Person.

The People retain a good Opinion of him.

*Henry V. proclaimed
King.*

Immediately after the Death of the King his Father, the Prince was proclaimed King, by the Name of Henry the Fifth. So far was any one from the Thoughts of disputing the Crown with him, that they who had been the most against the Advancement of the House of Lancaster, were the first to pay their Duty to him. The Earl of March himself relying on his Generosity, came of his own accord and put himself into his Hands, to the end he might give him a convincing Proof of his sincere Intention not to disturb him in the Possession of the Throne. In fine, such Confidence did the English place in him, that contrary to Custom, they offered to take the Oath of Allegiance before ever he was crowned. But he declined in a modest and obliging manner the receiving that Testimony of their Esteem. He told them it was not reasonable that they should swear to be faithful to him, before he himself had taken a solemn Oath to govern them with Equity and according to Law. This Moderation, which charmed all the World, quite effaced the disadvantageous Impressions that his former mer Course of Life might have given such as were not well acquainted with him. 1413.

* He is said among other Pranks to lie in wait for the Receivers of his Father's Rents, and in the Person of a Highway-man, to set upon and rob them.

The Ceremony of his Coronation being performed on the 9th of April, he granted that very Day a general Pardon for all Crimes, except Murders and Rapes. His first Proceedings plainly showed the Uprightness of his Intentions, and the Resolution he had taken worthily to fill the Throne to which he was raised. Before he applied himself to the Affairs of the State, he called before him all his old Companions, and having exhorted them to leave off that ill Course of Life they had led with him, he made them handsome Presents. But at the same Time, strictly charged them, upon Pain of incurring his Displeasure, not to presume to come to Court. The Astonishment of these People, who expected quite other Things, was as great as the Admiration of the Witnesses of a Reformation which afforded so good a Prospect.

He is crowned.
Act. Pub.
IX. 2.

He dismisses his old Companions.

After the King had given this first Proof of his Wisdom, he continued, without ceasing, to give many others which could admit of no doubt. In the first Place, he made choice for his Council, of Persons of the greatest Gravity, Abilities, and Repute among his Subjects. Then he turned out some of the Judges, and put such in their Room, as to the Knowledge of the Law joined a perfect Integrity. He did the same with regard to inferior Magistrates, and took particular Care to fill the vacant Benefices with none but Persons of sound Principles, and known Merit.

He chooses a Council.

Nothing remained to confirm the good Opinion all had conceived of him, but to show his Martial Virtues, and give some Proofs of his Piety. As to the first, he made appear during the whole Course of his Reign, that he gave Place to none of his Predecessors, as we shall have reason to be convinced hereafter. As to his Piety, it was not long before he became famous by two signal Instances. Indeed the first might be very ambiguous; but it was looked upon then as a most certain Sign, and the best Proof of the sincere Intentions of a Prince to promote the Glory of God: I mean the Condescension he had for the Clergy, in

He gives Proofs of his Piety.

1413.

He removes Richard's Body to Westminster.

promising them to persecute the Wickliffites or Lollards. The other Mark of his Piety, was the Care he took to repair as far as lay in his Power the Injury done to Richard II. He ordered the Body of that Prince to be removed from the Abbey of Langley, where he was buried in an un-decent Manner, to Westminster-Abby, and laid near Ann of Luxembourg his Queen. After he had performed this Duty, he founded three Religious Houses close by Shene, where the Soul of Richard was to be prayed for Night and Day.

His kind Parliament

The Parliament having been called some time before, met on the 15th of May, very well inclined to the new King; several Statutes were enacted, tending to the Preservation of the publick Peace, and of the Rights and Privileges of the People. Henry freely gave his Assent to all these Acts, and particularly to an Act to prevent Abuses in the Elections of Members of Parliament. The Conduct of Richard II. and some Attempts of the late King in that Matter, rendered this Act absolutely necessary.

The Clergy debate how to root out Heresy.

Whilst the Parliament was taken up with the publick Affairs, the Convocation of the Clergy was sitting under the Direction of Thomas Arundel, Archbishop of Canterbury. This Prelate, being extremely incensed against the Lollards, had obtained of the late King an Order to send Commissioners to Oxford, to take Informations concerning the Doctrines of the Wickliffites. The Business of these Commissioners was to discover the chief Abettors of this Heresy, and how it came to be spread over the Kingdom, especially in the Dioceses of London, Hereford, and Recheſter. At their Return, they brought what Informations they had taken to the Archbishop, who laid them before the Convocation. After several Debates, it was resolved, That there was no possibility of extirpating the Lollard-Heresy, unless care was taken to inflict exemplary Punishments on the principal Abettors of it: That among these, Sir John Oldcastle Baron of Cobham, was to be looked upon as the most considerable and dangerous: That therefore, as a Terror to the whole Seet, their principal Protector should be first taken to Task, and an Action entered against him for Heresy. But

They resolve to prosecute Oldcastle.
Act. Pub.
IX. 65.

as Oldcastle was the King's Domestick, and in great Esteem with him, it was thought that Method of proceeding might give Offence, unless they acquainted the King before-hand with the Matter, and got his Leave to prosecute the Heretick. The Archbishop taking this Affair upon him, waited on the King with Complaints against Oldcastle. He tried to persuade him, that Fire and Faggot were the only Means of extirpating Herefy, and that it was absolutely necessary for the Church's Interest, to proceed against Oldcastle according to the utmost Rigour of the Law. The King having calmly given him the hearing, replied, That he could never approve of using Force in reclaiming Hereticks, seeing Experience had but too often made appear, that rigorous Methods were as effectual against Truth as against Error: That he would talk himself with Oldcastle, and try to restore him to the right Way; and in case he could not succeed, he would then give leave that he should be prosecuted. Mean while, to give the Clergy some Satisfaction, he issued a Proclamation, forbidding the Lollards to hold any Meetings, and charging his Subjects not to be present at their Preachings. A few Days after he was pleased to talk with Oldcastle; and finding him not to be moved, he no longer opposed the Clergy's Request.

The Archbishop having obtained the King's Leave, sent a Summons to Oldcastle, who refusing to own the Authority of the Bishops, made a Jest of the Citation. He would not so much as suffer it to be served upon him, so that they were forced to fix it upon the Church-door at Rochester. Henry provoked at his haughty Proceedings, ordered him to be apprehended and committed to the Tower. On the 28th of September the Prisoner was brought before the Archbishop, assisted by two other Bishops and several Ecclesiasticks. As they could get no Answers from him, but what were directly repugnant to the established Opinions of those Days, they pronounced him Heretick, and delivered him over to the secular Power. His Death would have immediately followed the Sentence of Condemnation, if, by the Help of his Friends, or Carelessness of his Guards, he had not found Means to escape out of Prison.

They ask the King's Leave.

His Answer.

A&C. Pub.
IX. 46.

The King suffers Old-castle to be prosecuted.
p. 61.

He is committed to the Tower, and condemned.]

He escapes.

He

1413. He went and concealed himself in Wales, where his Persecutors left him not in quiet, as we shall see hereafter. These are all the remarkable Particulars with regard to Domestick Affairs, that happened from the 20th of March 1413, to the End of December, the same Year.

*Necessity of joining here
the French
with the English History.*

I am now going to enter upon the Account of the War Henry V renewed against France: A War which had been on Foot ever since the Branch of the Treaty of Brerigny, though often interrupted by Truces in the late Reigns. In order to give a just Idea of the Motives which induced Henry to carry his Army into France, it will be necessary to set before the Reader the State that Kingdom was then in: Without this, it would be difficult fully to understand the Sequel.

Affairs of France.

Charles VI, afflicted with a Distemper which rendered him for the greatest Part of his Time incapable of governing, had three Sons, namely, Lewis, John and Charles. The eldest which bore the Title of Dauphin, and Duke of Gnienne, was a Prince of an indifferent Character. At Sixteen Years of Age he had already taken to a debauched Life; and moreover, was strongly possessed with Notions that led him to arbitrary Power, and hurried him into many Extravagancies. The Favourites he had about him indulged him in this Course of Life, and could not bear that he should be told of a Reformation, by which they would have been so great Losers. On the contrary, to prevent the Execution of a certain Project which he had formed for the better governing the Kingdom, and which had received the Approbation of an Assembly of the chief Men, they inspired their young Master with a Desire to hold the Reins of the Government himself, during the King his Father's Distemper. They intimated to him, that the Duke of Burgundy had no manner of Right to seize the Administration of Affairs, and that no body had any claim to it, in Prejudice of the King's eldest Son, since he had exceeded the Time fixed by the Ordinance of Charles V. for the King's being of Age. Upon this Foundation they advised him to endeavour to thrust out the Duke of Burgundy, by seizing the Bastile, in order to hinder the Parisians

Parisians from assisting him. This Project was executed shortly after, by Means of the Governour of that Fortrefs, whom the Dauphin had gained to his Interests. But he had not reason long to rejoice at the Success of his Enterprize. Upon the first Rumour of it in Paris, the Citizens privately stirred up by the Duke of Burgundy, took Arms to the Number of Ten or Twelve Thousand Men. One Part went and invested the Bastile, the other under the Conduct of a Surgeon called John de Troye, came before the Dauphin's Palace, who not expecting this Insurrection, had no other Remedy but to appear at the Window, in order to try to appease them: But nothing was able to stop their Carreer. After having broke open the Doors of the Palace, they rushed into the Apartments and carried off above Twenty Persons whom they accused of corrupting the Prince, and threw them into Prison. On the other Hand, the Governour of the Bastile, being seized with Fear, delivered up the Fortrefs to the Duke of Burgundy, who in spite of the Dauphin's Efforts, continued Master of the Government. In the midst of these Troubles which happened in March 1413. Henry IV died in England, and Henry V his Son ascended the Throne.

Whilst the new King was busied in settling his Affairs at Home, the Troubles broke out afresh in France. At the End of April the Seditious took it in their Heads to wear white Hoods as a Badge of Distinction. John de Troye, at the Head of an armed Mob, brought one to the Dauphin who durst not refuse it. The King himself happening to be in the Street as he was going to the Church of Notre-Dame, was obliged by the Seditious to take a Whit-Hood. But their Insolence did not stop Here. Two Days after, their Leader came to the Palace of St. Paul where the King lay. There, in Presence of the whole Court, he undertook to justify the Imprisonment of the Dauphin's Officers, and added, there were still at Court a great Many more that equally deserved to be punished. At the same Time, without vouchsafing to hearken to the Intreaties of the Dauphin or of the King himself, he laid Hands upon a great Number of Lords and Ladies and carried them to Prison. Lewis of Bavaria, 1413.

A&A. Pub.
IX. 51. &c.

1413.

Bavaria himself, the Queen's Brother, was not spared. The King not being able to withstand the Torrent, was fain to consent that some of the Prisoners should be prosecuted, and to go to Paris with a White-Hood on, in order to inroll certain Edicts which the Seditious had demanded.

The Dauphin finding himself thus checked by the Factions, or rather by the Duke of Burgundy his Father-in-law, by whom they were privately guided, could not think of remaining in a Situation so opposite to his Temper, without making some Attempt to get out of it. The Heads of the Orleans-Faction, who had been forced to sign a Treaty whereby they were obliged to be at a Distance from Paris and the Court, were the only Persons he could expect any Assistance from. He contrived therefore a secret Negotiation with them; and the better to hide his Design, he went and conferred with them in Person, under Colour of bringing about an Accommodation between the two Parties, concerning some Breaches of the Peace of Bourges. After he had made a Combination with them, he managed it so that a Peace was confirmed, and by the new Treaty which was signed at Pontoise, the Orleans Party were allowed to go to Paris and pay their Respects to the King.

The Duke
of Burgundy applies again to Henry.
Act. Pub.
IX. 27.

July, p. 34.

Mean while, the Duke of Burgundy judging by what the Dauphin had already done, what he was to expect from him, had taken a Resolution to make sure of Help in case of Need. With this View, in the Month of June he had sent, as Earl of Flanders, an Embassy to England, whereof Ralph, Provost of St. Donas of Bruges was Chief, under Pretence of renewing the Treaty of Commerce between the English and Flemings. But in reality it was to propose an Alliance with Henry. This appears by a Commission which the King gave at the same time to the Bishop of St. David's and the Earl of Warwick, to conclude a personal Alliance between him and the Duke of Burgundy. There is hardly any Room to doubt but from that time the Duke had formed a Design to make a League with the King of England. We shall see hereafter much plainer Proofs of this Matter. However this Design was not so speedily executed. Apparently the Duke had no other Intent

Intent than to secure the Assistance of the English, in case he should be hard put to it, as he had done in the Reign of Henry IV. Otherwise he thought there would be no Occasion to press the Conclusion of that Affair.

1413.

Whatever her Thoughts might be, Henry did not think fit to let slip so fair an Opportunity of keeping up in France Commotions of which he might take Advantage. To that End he sent quickly after Ambassadors to Paris. Their publick Instructions were to call upon the Court of France to observe the Twenty-eight Years Truce better than had hitherto been done. Secondly, to confirm that same Truce or make a new One. Lastly, they had Power to decide all Differences between England and France. In all likelihood, one of the King's Motives, in sending this Embassy, was to get perfect Information of the Posture of Affairs in that Kingdom. But his chief Aim was to conclude with the Duke of Burgundy the Alliance that Prince had proposed to him. This evidently appears by a fourth Commission empowering them to sign an Alliance between him and the Duke, and between their respective Dominions. It is not therefore to be questioned but the Provost of St. Donas laid the Foundation of this Negotiation in his first Journey to London. This was transacted in July 1413.

*Henry sends an Embassy to Paris.
Act. Pub.
IX. 34. &c.*

The next Month brought with it a great Turn in the Affairs of France much to Henry's Advantage. The Orleans Party, at the Head of which were the Duke of Orleans the King's Nephew; the Duke of Berry his Uncle; the Duke of Bourbon, the Duke of Alençon, the Earls of En and Vendôme, were come near Paris, pursuant to the Liberty given them. At the same Time, the Dauphin, by his Intrigues, had gained to his Side vast Numbers of the Citizens, who promised to stand by him. Whereupon he ordered his Friends to take up Arms, and scoured about the Streets of Paris at the Head of Thirty-thousand Men. The Consternation of the opposite Party was so great, that they quitted the Louvre, the Town-House, and the Bastile, which they were in Possession of, without offering to make the least Resistance. The Duke of Burgundy perceiving it was not in his Power to stop the

A new Revolution in the Court of France.

*The Duke
of Burgundy retires.*

1413. Torrent, and dreading moreover the Arrival of the Orleans-Party, who were not far off, chose to retire into Flanders.

Edicts against him.

No sooner was he withdrawn, but the Orleans-Faction became uppermost at Court, without the Dauphin's reaping any Benefit by it. The King, being then in one of his Intervals, took the Government into his own Hands, and entertained so strong an Affection for the Duke of Orleans his Nephew, that he suffered himself to be wholly guided by his Counsels. The young Duke improving this Advantage, caused divers Edicts to be published against the Duke of Burgundy, and the Authors of the former Sedition to be prosecuted, several of whom were executed.

Truce between the two Crowns.
September.
Act. Pub. IX. 56.
First Demands of Henry.

Shortly after the Ambassadors of France and England meeting at Lelingham in Picardy to negotiate a Peace, forthwith agreed that the Truce should be inviolably kept till the 1st of June next ensuing. During the Negotiation, the English Ambassadors gave to understand, that the King their Master expected that France should restore whatever had been taken from England since the Treaty of Bretigny. This was in effect the Ground of the War which was all along kept on foot ever since the Violation of that Treaty; and this Demand had nothing in it to be wondered at. However, the Court of France having been in hopes that after the Death of Edward III, the Kings of England would think no more of asserting their Pretensions, was extremely alarmed at this Declaration. The Posture of Affairs made them justly apprehensive of the Wars breaking out anew: So that without Loss of Time were dispatched to London the Archbishop of Bourges, the Constable D' Albret, and Col, one of the King's Secretaries, under Pretence of endeavouring to make Peace, but in reality to sound Henry's Intentions. These Ambassadors arrived at London in October, and could obtain no more than the prolonging of the Truce for as much time longer as they should think proper.

Embassy from France.
p. 60.
p. 70.

Whilst

Whilst they were in England, the Court of France continued the Prosecutions against the Duke of Burgundy and his Adherents, many of whom suffered under the Hands of the Executioner. Lewis of Anjou, King of Sicily, who had with him a Daughter of the Duke of Burgundy, betrothed to his eldest Son, reproachfully sent her back to her Father. Shortly after, he gave one of his Daughters in Marriage to Charles Earl of Pontieu, third Son of the King, who was not yet full thirteen Years old. Nothing could prove more fatal to France than this Match. The young Prince having espoused the Interests and Passions of the King his Father-in-law, became sworn Enemy to the Duke of Burgundy. At the same Time he stirred up against himself the Hatred of that Duke, who though in Exile, had still a powerful Party in the Kingdom. This mutual Animosity, which continually increased, was the Occasion of many Calamities to France.

1413.
The King of Sicily declares against the Duke of Burgundy.

He gives his Daughter to Charles, third Son of the King.

In the mean Time, the Dauphin receiving no Benefit from the late Revolution at Court, could not behold without extreme Regret the Duke of Orleans at the Head of Affairs, whilst he himself was without Credit, and like a Prisoner in the Lowvre, where he was narrowly watched. This Constraint being insupportable to a Prince of his Character, he readily listened to the Offer the Duke of Burgundy made him, of assisting him to the utmost of his Power, in order to place him in the Post which his Birth entitled him to. They entered therefore into a sort of League to drive the Duke of Orleans from Court. The Duke of Burgundy having thus made sure of the Dauphin, approached Paris at the Head of an Army, pretending his Design was to free the Dauphin his Son-in-law from Captivity. He verily believed that Paris would declare in his Favour: but Things were so well settled there that no Body stirred. During these Transactions, the King, who for some time had been in one of his Fits of Phrensie, being come again to his right Senses, published against the Duke of Burgundy a thundering Edict, stiling him Traitor and Enemy of the State. This Edict, joined to the little Prospect of Paris declaring for him, caused the Duke to return into Flanders.

The Duke of Burgundy offers his Assistance to the Dauphin, who accepts of it.

He approaches Paris.

An Edict against him.

He retires.

1413. Let us leave a Moment the Affairs of France, to which we shall have very soon an Occasion to return, since they are the chief Subject of this Reign, in order to see what passed in England in the Beginning of the Year 1414.

1414. Mention was made in the late Reign of the two Attempts of the House of Commons, to strip the Clergy of good Part of their Estates, but without Success. The Clergy could not doubt but these Attempts were the Fruits of the Doctrine of the Lollards. In all Appearance, this was not one of the least Causes of the Hatred they bore these pretended Hereticks. It was likewise for this Reason, that in the late Convocation they had resolved to use the most violent Means to extirpate a Heresy to them so detestable. Oldcastle, a Man of a good Family and extraordinary Merit *, was destined to be the first Victim, for a Terror to the whole Sect. But by very good Luck he had escaped out of the Hands of his Enemies. It was not without great Grief that the Archbishop had heard the King say, he did not by any Means approve of rigorous Methods. He even showed plainly enough that it was his real Opinion, since after the escape of Oldcastle, he took no Care to have him pursued and apprehended again. It was evident, that as long as the King was thus inclined to Gentleness and Moderation, the Clergy would hardly be able to have their Desire upon the Hereticks. So that it was their Interest that the King should have other Sentiments more agreeable to the cruel Zeal wherewith Ecclesiasticks are generally animated. Nothing was more conducive to that End, than to make him believe that the Lollards had a Design upon his Person, and were forming Conspiracies to overturn the State. Accordingly to this the Clergy applied themselves without Loss of Time. The late Proclamation against their assembling together, quickly furnished them with

The Lollards are accused of conspiring against the King.

* He was Sheriff of Herefordshire in 8 Hen. 4. and had Summons to Parliament among the Barons of the Realm, in 11, 12, 13 of that King's Reign. He was sent beyond Sea with the Earl of Arundel to aid the Duke of Burgundy against the French. He married the Niece and Heir of Thomas Lord Cobham, and for that Reason took the Title of Lord Cobham, Dugdale.

with a fair Opportunity. The Lollards continued their Meetings notwithstanding the Proclamation, though with all possible Secrecy. As they durst not meet together in Houses, for fear of being discovered, they commonly pitched upon some unfrequented Place in the Country to worship God in after their Manner. Some of them having resolved to assemble without one of the Gates of London, in a Place called St. Giles's Fields, which was then covered with Bushes, were betrayed by false Brethren, as it often happens on such Occasions. This Discovery afforded their Enemies the Opportunity they were so eagerly in pursuit of. The King was then at Eltham, about seven Miles from London, where he designed to keep his Christmas. He was very far from expecting any such Thing as a Conspiracy against his Person, when all on a sudden, towards Night he was told, that Oldcastle was in St. Giles's with twenty Thousand Lollards. It was further said, that their Design was to kill the King, the Princes his Brothers, and all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal who were not their Friends. Certainly it was very unlikely that twenty Thousand Men should have been able to come together at the very Gates of London, without any Body's having any notice of it. It was still more improbable that Oldcastle, an old experienced Warrior, should make choice of St. Giles's Fields, overgrown as they were with Bushes and Shrubs, for the Rendezvous of his Troops. Nevertheless the News was backed with so many Circumstances, that the King could not help giving Credit to the Report. He immediately drew together what armed Men he could, and gave Orders that the Gates of London should be kept shut, lest the Mob should go out and assist the Rebels. As he was naturally very bold and courageous, he resolved to attack them before they should have taken all their Measures. He arrived upon the Place about Mid-night, and finding about fourscore or a hundred Persons, fell upon them. There were about a Score killed, and Sixty taken. Unhappily for them, they had brought Arms with them for their Defence, in Case they were set upon by their Persecutors. In all Appearance, it was this that helped to convince

1414

The King is told 20000 of them were met together.

He believes it.

He goes to attack them.

vince

1414.
The Depositions of some Loll-ards.

Ast. Pub.
IX. 119.

ibid.
p. 89.

vince the King they had some ill Design. This alone however would not have been capable of perswading him that they had really conspired against him, if among those that were taken, there had not been some that, gained by Promises, or awed by Threats, confessed whatever their Enemies had a Mind they should. They said their Intent was to destroy the King, and the Princes his Brothers, with most of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal; in hopes the Confusion which would ensue in the Kingdom, would prove favourable to their Religion. Some deposed, that after the Murder of the King and Princes, they intended to make Oldcastle Regent of the Kingdom, and that the Conspiracy had been carried on under the Direction of that Lord. The Truth is, one can hardly conceive how a Prince so judicious as Henry, could suffer himself to be imposed upon by so gross a Fiction. Indeed had he found twenty Thousand Men in Arms in St. Giles's, as they would have made him believe, that would have been a strong Evidence. But that Fourscore or a Hundred Men, among whom there was not a single Person of any Rank, should have formed such a Project, is extremely improbable. Besides, he himself knew Sir John Oldcastle to be a Man of Sense, and yet nothing was more foolish and extravagant than the Project sathered upon him; a Project which they supposed he was to put in Execution with a handful of Men, without being present himself, and without any one's knowing where he was, or his having appointed any other Leader in his Room. But however, the King thought him guilty, and in that Belief set a Thousand Marks upon his Head, with a Promise of perpetual Exemption from Taxes to any Town that should deliver him up. Nevertheless it is probable that in Time the King perceived the Falseness of this Imputation, and what makes me think so is this. In the first Place, what strict Inquiry so ever might be made over all the Kingdom, to discover the Accomplices of this pretended Conspiracy, not a single Person could be found besides those taken upon the Spot. And yet it is manifest, that in order to execute a Design of that Nature, and make it turn to Account,

count, Fourscore or a Hundred Persons of no great Distinction, were not sufficient. In the next Place, even of those that were taken at St. Giles's, few were executed forthwith, whilst the Prejudice against them was in its full Force. The King pardoned all the rest. Thirdly, we find in the Collection of Publick Acts, not only an Act of Indemnity for all the Lollards, but likewise several private Pardons granted to some that were condemned, though they had constantly denied the Fact. It would not be very strange that the King should have pardoned Criminals that confessed themselves Guilty : but it is unusual with Sovereigns to forgive such a Crime in obstinate Offenders, who render themselves unworthy of a Pardon, by denying what their Sentence supposes they have been convicted of. I add further, that Clemency was not Henry's favourite Virtue ; on the contrary he leaned very much to the Side of Severity, as will appear by several Instances in his Reign. What likelihood then was there that he should be pleased to pardon Persons convicted of having intended to murder him, together with all the Royal Family and great Men of the Kingdom, at the very Time they obstinately persisted in denying the Fact for which they were condemned, had he really believed them guilty ? Lastly, the Principles of the Lollards were very far from allowing such Barbarities. It is therefore more than probable, that this Impeachment was forged, in order to render the Lollards odious to the King, to the End his License might be obtained for their Persecution, and that the King himself was convinced of its Falsehood, after his first Prejudice came to be removed. It must however be confessed, that in all the Pardons he granted upon this Score, he always supposed the Crime to be proved. But in order to a Pardon, it was necessary to take the Crime for granted.

In February 1414, Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury went to give an Account to God for all the Innocent Blood he had caused to be shed. Henry Chicheley Bishop of St. David's was put in his Room. But the Lollards got nothing by this Change, he being no less their Enemy than his Predecessor.

Death of Archbishop Arundel.
Chicheley succeeds.

1414.
Henry demands the re-establishment of the Treaty of Bretigny.
A&C. Pub.
IX. 102, 103.

Offer of one of Charles's Daughters to Henry.

Henry consents to it.

ibid.
P. 91.

Truce prolonged, January.

Henry sends Ambassadors to France.
P. 103.

Another Embassy.
ibid.
P. 132.

Henry's Demands,
p. 203.

I left the Archbishop of Bourges and D'Albret the Constable at London, where they quickly discovered the King's Intentions. The Commissioners which treated with them, demanded in Henry's Name, whatever had been taken from England since the Treaty of Bretigny. The French Ambassadors replied, They had no manner of Instructions upon that Head. They proposed however, as of their own Heads, a proper Means, in their Opinion, to procure a Peace between the two Kings. This was a Match between the King of England, and Catharine the youngest of Charles IV's Daughters. This Princess had four Sisters, one of whom was a Nun, and the other three married: So that she was the only one that could be offered to Henry. This Proposal was not wholly rejected. Though Henry should insist upon the Restitution he demanded, as being the speediest and most effectual Way to settle a lasting Peace, what the French Ambassadors offered him, not being inconsistent with the Restitution, he thought he might accept of the Offer without doing himself any Prejudice. But as the Ambassadors had not sufficient Powers to treat about this Affair, it was only agreed that the Truce should be prolonged to the 2d of February 1415.

Upon the Departure of the French Ambassadors, Henry sent Five into France, to carry on the Negotiation begun at London, concerning the Restitution and Marriage. The Ambassadors were impowered to promise in the King's Name, that he would not engage in any other Marriage-Treaty till the 15th of May. They might even prolong that Term if they thought proper.

The Court of France not thinking the Powers of these Ambassadors sufficient, Charles wrote to Henry, that in Case he would send Ambassadors with fuller Powers, he would willingly treat with them. Upon this Letter Henry dispatched Five more, all eminent for their Birth and High-Posts, namely, the Bishop of Norwich, the Earls of Dorset, Warwick, Salisbury, and the Lord Grey.

These Ambassadors entered immediately into a Conference with King Charles's Commissioners, the Chief of whom was the Duke of Berry his Uncle. They demanded

1414.

ed at first the whole Kingdom of France for their Master, by Virtue of his Right, as Heir of Edward III. But after a short Pause, they added, that being very sensible their Demand might cause some Disgust, they would make another, with a Protestation however that it should be without any Prejudice to the Right of their Sovereign. Then they limited their Demands to the following Articles :

I. Normandy, Anjou, Maine, and Touraine, in full Sovereignty.

II. The Right of Sovereignty over the Earldom of Flanders, and Dutchy of Bretagne.

III. Whatever France held in Guienne.

IV. All in General that had been given up to Edward III. by the Treaty of Bretagne.

V. The whole Country possessed by France between the Somme and Gravelin.

VI. Lastly, That all those Countries should be made over to the King of England in full Sovereignty, to hold them as Neighbour, and not as Vassal of the Crown of France.

Before an Answer was returned to these Demands, the Duke of Berry earnestly pressed the Ambassadors to begin with the Negotiation of the Marriage, affirming it was the proper Means to settle a solid and lasting Peace between the two Kingdoms. He even tendered a very considerable Dowry for the Princess Catharine ; but the English Ambassadors would consider the Match only as an Appendix, and not as the Foundation of the Peace. For this Reason, they insisted upon settling the Terms of the Peace first, before the Marriage should be meddled with. In fine, after many Disputes on both Sides, the English Ambassadors brought down their Demands to the three following Articles, to which they required a positive Answer, before any other Affairs should be taken in Hand.

1414.

I. They demanded whatever had been given up to England by the Great Peace, that is, by the Treaty of Bretigny.

II. One Half of Provence, with the Earldoms of Beaufort and Nogent.

III. The six Hundred Thousand Crowns which remained unpaid of King John's Ransom.

As for the Match, they roundly affirmed, that the King their Master would never marry the Princess Catharine, unless he should be sure of a firm and lasting Peace with King Charles. That besides, as the Offers hitherto made him were very inconsiderable, they had no Power to treat about that Matter. That therefore it would not only be to no Purpose to talk of the Marriage; but moreover they durst not meddle with that Point before the rest of the Articles were all agreed upon. They added however, that in hopes more reasonable Offers would be made, they were willing to speak their Thoughts, that no less could be offered with the Princess than two Millions of Gold-Crowns.

Some Days after the Duke of Berry delivered them a Writing, containing the Offers France was willing to make in order to attain to a Peace, with the Answers to their Demands, namely;

I. That the King of France offered Aginois, Basadois, Auch in part, Perigord, Escarre, Oleron, Bigorre, Saintonge beyond the Charente, Quercy, (Montauban excepted) with all the Country between the Tarn and the Auvergne, Angoumois and Rouergne.

II. That the King could not dispose of Provence, since it was not in his Possession, and since he had not contributed to the putting it in the Hands of the present Possessors.

III. That seeing for the sake of Peace he was willing to give up so many fine and rich Provinces which he lawfully held, the King of England ought to be contented with these Offers.

IV.

IV. As for the Match, that although the Dowry of a Daughter of France was fixed to a much less Sum than he had already offered, he would on the Score of Peace, raise it to six Hundred Thousand Crowns. 1414.

These Demands and Answers were the Subject of several Conferences, which lasted many Days, but of which it would be tedious to relate the Particulars. It will be sufficient to observe, that the Ambassadors of England reduced at length all their Demands to the Treaty of Bretigny, and to a Million of Crowns for the Princess's Portion. But as the French still thought that Sum exorbitant, the English gave to understand, they could lower it, on Condition, that in Case two Sons should come of this Marriage, the youngest should have Montrevil and Ponthieu in full Sovereignty. But the French returned no Answer to this, and the Conferences ended March 13th, 1414.

Whilst this Affair was negotiating at Paris, the Enemies of the Duke of Burgundy continued to stir up King Charles against him, insomuch as looking upon him as an Enemy to his Person and Government, he resolved to make War upon him. To that end, having determined to command his Army in Person, he went and took the Oriflamb [or Royal Standard of France] at St. Denis; after which he became Master of Soissons and Campiegne, which the Duke had seized. The Duke of Burgundy was then little able to withstand him, because the Flemings refused to serve him against France: The which gave the Duke of Bourbon also an Opportunity of taking Bapaume. They did not intend to stop there; but luckily for him, the King was seized with a fresh Fit of Lunacy. This Accident afforded the Duke Time to put a strong Garrison into Arras. The Duke of Burgundy is driven to great straits. Mezerai. Charles wars against him. and falls into one of his Fits.

King Charles being unable to act, the Dauphin his Son took upon him the Administration, no Body having a Right to dispute it with him. Whether that Prince had some Reason to be displeased with the Duke of Burgundy, or whether he did not care to be Friends with him, since he stood no longer in need of him, he carried the King his Father before Arras, to which he intended to lay Siege: The Dauphin is Regent.

1414. but he was too late. The Place had been so well taken
He grants the Duke a Peace. Care of, that it was a hard Task to carry it. The Difficulties of the Siege, the Sollicitations of the Countess of Hainault Sister of the Duke of Burgundy, and perhaps the private Interests of the Dauphin, caused a Peace to be granted to the Duke about the End of September; but it was however upon hard Terms. By the Peace the King granted the Duke a Pardon, in which five Hundred of his Adherents were excepted. It was also agreed, that all his Friends should remove at a Distance from Court, and that he himself was not to come there, unless sent for, with the Consent of the Council, and by Letters under the Great Seal. Finally, that the King's Banners should be kept up on the Walls of Arras.

Several Negotiations of the Duke of Burgundy with Henry. During the Preparations in France for this War, the Duke of Burgundy being at a very great Loss, by Reason of the Obstinacy of the Flemings, had sent into England the Provost of St. Donas to renew the Treaty begun with Henry. This Envoy had Power not only to conclude an Alliance between the King and Duke, but also to treat about the King's Marriage with the Princess Catharine. In all appearance, the Duke demanded the King's Assistance to put him in Possession of the Government of the Kingdom of France; which done, he undertook to conclude the intended Marriage to the Satisfaction of his Benefactor. This discovers what were from that Time the Designs of that Prince. So that it is not without Grounds that Mezerai said, the Arms of the English were drawn into France by the Betrayers of their Country. The Peace of Arras put a stop for some Time to this Negotiation.

Henry tries to take Advantage of the Troubles in France. Mean while Henry still continued in the Resolution of improving the Advantages which the Situation of Affairs in France gave him a Prospect of. He perceived that at the most he should have to deal but with half the Forces of the Kingdom, and that the other half would even make a Diversion in his Favour. Besides, he saw he was likely to conclude very shortly with the Duke of Burgundy an Alliance which could not but turn to his Advantage. And therefore without any further Delay, he had called a Parliament liament at Leicester for the 30th of April, to the end he might get their Approbation of his Design, and obtain such Aids as were necessary to enable him to go through with so great an Undertaking. It must be observed that the Writs were issued in March, whilst the Provost of St. Donas was at London. 1414.

He calls a Parliament at Leicester.

The Parliament being met, the Clergy, ever incensed against the Lollards, got their Emissaries to move the reviving and even increasing the Rigor of the Statutes against Hereticks. But for this once their Animosity had like to have made them over-shoot the Mark. The Project the Commons had formed in the late Reign against the Ecclesiasticks, had twice miscarried by the exceeding Forwardness Wickliff's Followers had shown in that Business. The Clergy taking Advantage of their Animosity, had given the late King to understand, that a Motion of that Nature could not but come from the Hereticks with whom the House of Commons abounded, and that it was with the Downfall of the Clergy that the Destruction of the Catholick Religion was to begin. For this Reason, Henry IV had strongly opposed it, and with that Haughtiness as gave great Offence to the Commons. Wherefore, though the Members that were no Friends to Wickliff's Doctrine joined in the Project, yet they had not been able to hinder the too great Zeal of the Lollards from laying an insurmountable Obstacle in its Way. Nevertheless in spite of the ill Success it had hitherto met with, they who had formed it had not entirely dropped it. They had only resolved to take another Course, that the Rock upon which it had twice split, might be avoided. To that End, when a Motion was made in the House of Commons to enact new Statutes against the Lollards, they who had before been against it, closed with it without any Solicitation. The Clergy appeared exceedingly well pleased. The Pulpits every where resounded with the Praises of the present Parliament. It was not like that of 1404, the unlearned Parliament, but the wisest and most zealous for the Church that had ever sat since the Beginning of the Monarchy. The Truth is, nothing could be done more conformable to the Clergy's Desires than the Act 1414.

Act which passed on this Occasion. It was enacted, That all the Magistrates of the Kingdom, from the Lord Chancellor down to the meanest Officer, should take an Oath to do their utmost to suppress Hereticks, and assist the Bishops in the Execution of this good Design. This Act was no sooner passed, but a violent Persecution broke out against the Lollards. Several were burnt alive. Some left the Kingdom, and others abjured their Religion, to escape the Torments prepared for them.

The Commons petition the King to seize the Church-Lands.

But in a little Time, the Scene was changed, with respect to the Clergy. They did not dream that the very Persons who had just appeared so zealous for the Church, would ever think of pulling it down; for that was the Idea they gave of the Project of divesting the Ecclesiasticks of the Riches they enjoyed. And yet the same Commons, who in so authentick a Way had lately screened themselves from all Suspicion of Herefy, willing to comply with the King's Demand of a Subsidy, presented to him an Address, praying him to seize upon the Estates of the Clergy. This Address was grounded upon the same Considerations that had been presented to the late King upon the same Score. It was maintained, that the Revenues of the Church would be much better laid out in providing for such a Number of Nobles, Colleges, and Hospitals. This was a stunning Blow to the Clergy, and the more because after the Act lately passed, and which was actually put in Execution, there was not the least Room left to represent the Commons as Heretical or Abettors of Herefy.

The King seems to approve of the Petition.

The King himself being upon the Point of beginning an expensive War, believed or feigned to believe, that there was a Necessity to do what the House of Commons desired. As his Revenues would of Course be greatly increased by it, that Consideration did not a little bias him to hearken to so advantageous a Motion.

The Clergy seek to divert the Blow.

The Clergy perceiving their Ruin was inevitable, unless some Remedy was found against the Evil which hung over their Heads, met together to consult about the Means to prevent, or at least to weaken the Blow as much as possible. After divers Debates upon a Matter of that Importance tance to them, they came to these two Resolutions. The First was, to give up some Part of their Lands to the King, in order to save the rest. The Second, to divert the King's Thoughts from Affairs at Home, by engaging him in a foreign War, which might wholly engross him. The frequent sending Ambassadors from Paris to London; and from London to Paris, making them conclude that the King was mediating some Enterprize against France, they resolved to stir him up to the utmost of their Power, to carry War into that Kingdom. Pursuant to these Schemes, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who undertook to be the Spokesman, told him, " That the Motion of the House of Commons, " which seemed advantagious to the State, was not so in " reality : That in Case their Project was executed, the " Church's Revenues would be put to Uses which the " King in particular would reap no Benefit from, but on " the contrary, might in Time be extremely prejudicial to " the Sovereign : That by augmenting the Number and " Riches of the Nobility, as was intended, at the same " Time would be enlarged a Power which ever since the " Foundation of the Monarchy, had all along opposed " the Sovereigns, and even hurled some of them down the " Precipice : That the Founding of Hospitals would serve " only to encourage People in Sloth and Idleness, when " they should see so many Houses ready to receive them, " without being obliged to work ; but that the Clergy, " more sincerely affected to the King than the House of " Commons, were very willing to give him upon this Oc- " casion a sensible Proof of their Zeal and Affection for " his Person, by delivering up the Alien Priories, which " being in Number one Hundred and Ten, were possessed " of Lands which would considerably increase the Re- " venue of the Crown : That all the Estates of these Hou- " ses would be entirely his ; whereas if the Project of the " Commons took Effect, he would be no Gainer by it. "

1414.
They come to two Resolutions.

They offer
the King
the Lands of the Alien Priories.

Whether the King suffered himself to be perswaded by these Arguments, or whether he thought it was always the best way to take what the Clergy offered of their own Accord, he accepted of the Proposal. Whereupon the Lands

He accepts of the Offer.
Act. Pub.
IX. 280.

of 1414.

of these Priories were given him by Act of Parliament, without the Clergy's opposing it.

Mean while the Clergy being apprehensive that sooner or later the King would have a mind to what the Commons had offered him, seriously thought of putting in Execution the other Part of their Scheme. To that purpose the Archbishop took upon him to endeavour to induce the King to make War upon France. The King's warlike Temper, his stirring of late with regard to the Affairs of France, and the universal Desire of the whole Kingdom, put him in Hopes that his Design would be crowned with Success. Having therefore prepared a Speech proper to produce that Effect, he took occasion to speak it in Parliament, before the King himself.

He began with insinuating Praises of the King's Virtues, saying, he was worthy to wear not the Crown of England only, but that of the whole World. Then addressing himself to the King, he represented to him, “ That it by no “ Means redounded to his Glory, to leave the King of France
 “ in the peaceable Enjoyment of Normandy, Anjou, Tourain, “ Maine, and Part of Guienne, all these Provinces having “ been wrested from the Kings of England by pure Vio“ lence, and on frivolous Pretences. That it was not only “ to these Countries that he had an indisputable Right, but “ might also very justly lay Claim to the whole Kingdom “ of France, as Heir and Successor of Edward III. Then “ he urged at length the Reasons which have been related “ upon this Point, in the Reign of Edward. He talked “ of the Salick Law as a Chimera built upon no good Foun“ dation, and which, being repugnant to the Law of Na- “ nure, could not be admitted, supposing it was as real as “ it was imaginary. He asserted, that Pepin the Short,
 “ who dispossessed the Line of Meroveus, claimed the Crown
 “ as Heir to Blithilda, Daughter of Clothaire I; and that “ Hugh Capet founded his Title upon his being descended “ from a Daughter of Lewis le Debonnaire. He added, “ that these Claims, which would have been ridiculous, if “ the Salick Law had been in force ever since Phasansond, “ were clear Evidences that it was then unknown. That “ be“ besides, such a Law would be contrary to the Law of “ God himself, who disposed in quite another Manner of ^{1414.}

 “ the Inheritance of Zelophehad, in favour of his Daugh- ^{Numt. 27.}
 “ ters. That the famous French Civilians had confessed, “ that the Salick Law was a Contradiction both to the Law
 “ of God and Nature (a). In fine, that the glorious Suc“ cess with which God had crowned the Arms of Edward “ III, plainly showed that God approved not of that pre“ tended Law. That if afterwards he permitted that Mo“ narch and the Prince of Wales his Son to end their “ Days before they were able to repair the Losses they “ had sustained in France, nothing can be inferred from “ thence against the Justice of their Claims. That by his “ Judgments he was pleased to punish the Sins of the English “ Nation, but never intended to deprive the Heirs and Suc“ cessors of Edward of their just Rights to the Crown of “ France. That the Interruption of the Prosecution of these “ Rights, occasioned by the Slothfulness of Richard II,
 “ and the Troubles of the late Reign, could not be confi“ dered as an entire Desisting. That England enjoying at “ present a happy Tranquillity under the Government of “ a Prince endowed with so many excellent Qualities,
 “ the relinquishing of these just Pretensions would be run“ ning counter to all the Rules of Prudence and Politicks.
 “ That moreover, the Posture of Affairs in France pre“ sented an Opportunity which in vain would be sought “ hereafter. Finally, he exhorted the King to exercise the “ Talents Heaven had blessed him with, and not to remain “ in an ignoble State of Inactivity, but prepare, without “ dreading the Difficulties, for so just and glorious a Con“ quest, which would render him the greatest Potentate in “ Europe. He closed his Speech with saying, that if the “ King would be pleased to take in hand so noble an Un“ dertaking, the Clergy would give him a larger Subsidy than “ they had ever granted to any of his Ancestors, and that

(a) The Archbishop, or he that made this Speech, was ignorant doubtless that without the Salick Law Edward III. could have no manner of Claim to the Crown of France. Upon which see the Reign of Edward III.

1414. " he did not question but his Lay-Subjects would do the " same".

The War against France resolved, and a Subsidy granted the King.

Most Historians pretend that this Speech had such a sudden and wonderful Effect, that Henry immediately resolved to prosecute his Claim to the Crown of France : But the Negotiations which had been set on foot before upon this Head, and of which I have given an Account, plainly make appear, that this Resolution was already taken, and that the Business at present was to get the Parliament to fall into the same Sentiments. To this the Archbishop's Speech perhaps greatly contributed: At least, it is certain that the Commons before they broke up approved of the Design, and granted the King a Subsidy of Three Hundred Thousand Marks to begin with. There is some likelihood that upon this Occasion the Archbishop acted in Concert with the King, either to sound the Mind of the Commons, or to stir them up to a War. Be that as it will, this Resolution perfectly corresponding with the Clergy's Project, it is no wonder the Archbishop should so strongly urge the Necessity of a War. The Truth is, this Affair was no sooner resolved in Parliament, but the Bill intended against the Clergy fell of its own accord, Peoples Minds being otherwise taken up.

Continuation of the Negotiations between France and England.

All the Rest of this Year was spent in the continual going and coming of Ambassadors to London or Paris. France would fain have Henry's Marriage with the Princess Catherine to be an equivalent for the greatest Part of the Demands of England. This was the Project that Court had formed, imagining that Henry might be decoyed by that Lure. Henry, for his Part, rejected not the Proposal, provided the Marriage was considered only as a Consequence of the Peace, or at least such Conditions were annexed to it, as should procure him the Restitution of the Provinces lost since the Treaty of Bretigny. He made as if he suffered himself to be drove off to a certain Degree. He sent Power upon Power to his Ambassadors to prolong the Time of the Ingagement he had entered into upon that Score. But when the Match was proposed, the same Ambassadors refused to meddle with it till the Terms of the Peace were first first agreed upon. This was the Subject of all the Negotiations. Mean while, it is certain that both Sides had no other View but to gain Time. Henry was too wise not to perceive that France would never comply with his Demands before she had received some fatal Blow. On the other Hand, as there had not been for a good while any considerable Alteration in England, besides the Accession of a new King to the Crown, the Court of France could not believe that the English were in a Condition to support the War they so loudly threatned. So that the sole View of the French was to amuse Henry till Time should cause some Turn in the Affairs of either Kingdom. Henry went on gradually, without going out of his way, there being nothing at Home capable of giving him any Interruption. France, on the contrary, was full of Dissentions. Those at the Helm took more care to keep their Ground against the opposite Party, than to prevent the Desigas of the King of England. It was even next to impossible that they should be able to take just Measures at such a Juncture. The Dauphin, who had the Management of Affairs, was a Prince whose Head was more Hot than Able. But granting his Capacity had been greater, what could he have done, hemmed in as he was by two Factions which divided the Kingdom, and whereof neither was really attached to his Interests? Besides, neither the Dauphin nor the Orleans-Faction could be persuaded, that after an Intermission of two whole Reigns, the King of England would even think in good earnest of asserting his Right to the Crown of France. We find in the English History, that after Henry had sent the first Time to demand the Crown of France, the Dauphin, in Derision of his Youth, sent him for a Present a Tun of Tennis-Balls. His Intent no doubt was to let him know that he thought him fitter to play at Tennis than manage Arms *: But it was not long before he was of another Opinion. Such was the Disposition of the Court of

The Disadvantages France lay under.

The Dauphin's scornful Present to Henry.

* Henry sent him back word, he would repay him with Bills of greater Force, whose Strokes the strongest Gates of Paris should not be Rackets sufficient to rebound.

1414. France, whilst Henry was only engrossed in making Preparations necessary to accomplish his Designs.

France begins to take other Measures.

Act. Pub.
IX. 139.

The Resolution taken by the Parliament of Leicester opened the Eyes of those who governed France. They were sensible at length that Henry was in good Earnest, and it was not without some Confusion, that they perceived he had made use, to over-reach them, of the same Means they had practised themselves to amuse him. The Negotiations about the Marriage, and the frequent prolonging the Engagement he had voluntarily entered into, were only a Decoy he used to hinder France from being provided for her Defense. This is what plainly enough appears by the Parliament's Resolve. Then it was that Charles's or the Dauphin's Council, thought it high time to think seriously of giving Henry some Satisfaction. To that Purpose, Secretary Col was dispatched to him with fresh Offers, but which were far below his Claims. Before the meeting of the Parliament of Leicester, Henry had not, as one may say, demanded the whole Kingdom of France but by the By, and to serve as a Foundation for his other Pretensions. But when he found himself backed by his Parliament, he talked at a much higher Rate, and seemed unwilling to be satisfied with what he had demanded at first. However, to amuse France, he all along pretended to desire that the Affair might be determined by a Negotiation. To that end, he readily consented that the Marriage should be treated about, and the Term of his Engagement prolonged to the 15th of August, empowering his Ambassadors to put it off as much longer as they should judge proper. But all this made him not delay or interrupt his Preparations for War.

Ibid.
140, 141.

Henry continues his Negotiations with the Duke of Burgundy.
p. 179.

Mean while the Negotiation with the Duke of Burgundy still went on, whilst that Prince was hard pressed by his Enemies. In the Month of June, Henry sent to him Philip Morgan, a Person of great Abilities, whom he always employed in Negotiations of the greatest Importance. Morgan's publick Instructions were only to renew the Truce with the Flemings. But the Choice of that Ambassador, and the coming of Copin de la Vieuville into England from the Duke, together with the present Juncture of Time, are plain plain Evidences enough that these Goings and Comings were not purely to prolong a Truce of Commerce, wherein there was no great Difficulty. Besides, the Discovery we shall see hereafter, will make appear what was then in the Duke of Burgundy's Head. The gaining of that Prince to his Interests was a material Point to Henry. A fairer Opportunity could not offer, since it was at a Time when the Court of France showed no manner of Regard for him. But he boggled, it seems, at making so extraordinary a Step, and was unwilling to have recourse to Henry without an absolute Necessity. In all these Negotiations were spent the Year 1414.

In the Beginning of the next Year, Henry consented to the prolonging the Truce to the 1st of May. Mean while the Court of France, alarmed at the great Preparations carrying on in England, sent thither again the Archbishop of Bourges, with eleven more Ambassadors. Apparently the Archbishop made some new Offer to Henry, but which was not considerable enough to content him: All he could obtain was, the further prolonging the Truce to the 8th of June.

Whilst these Ambassadors were at London, the King assembled the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, at least as many as were at hand. When they were met, he acquainted them by the Bishop of Winchester his Uncle, and Lord Chancellor, with his Resolution of going in Person, and carrying War into France, in order to recover the Inheritance of his Ancestors. This Declaration seemed needless, seeing the great Men had been sufficiently informed of his Design. But apparently, his Intent was to oblige by that Means the French Ambassadors to discover at once what they had to propose to him, he imagining that they still refrained to let him know the utmost they were to offer. The present Posture of Affairs in France made him hope they would propose the putting Things upon the Foot of the Treaty of Bretigny. If so, he would doubtless have been satisfied with so considerable an Advantage, though he had for some Time laid claim to the whole Kingdom of France. The Archbishop of Bourges no longer questioning the King's Designs, 1414.

1415.
Act. Pub.
IX. p. 197.
p. 219.

The Truce prolonged again.

p. 225.
Henry tells the Lords he is resolved to go to France.
p. 222.

The Truce prolonged again.

p. 262.
p. 282.

1415. Designs, acquainted him, that he wanted to go to France for fresh Instructions; upon which Henry consented the Truce should be further prolonged to the 15th of July. The same Prelate being returned to England a few Days before the Expiration of the Truce, added something more to the former Offers; but it was to no purpose. Nothing was capable of satisfying Henry but the Treaty of Bretigny. The Archbishop demanded his Answer in writing, and the King ordered it to be given him immediately. Some add, that the Archbishop seeing there was nothing to be done, fell to reproaching the King, that not content with a Crown which the King his Father had unjustly wrested from Richard II, he had a mind to invade that of France too: but he would find it a more difficult Task than he imagined.

The Archbishop of Bourges's bold Words to the King.

*Henry im-barks his Troops, and continues his Negotiation with
the Duke of Burgundy.*

Every Thing being ready, Henry ordered all his Troops to repair forthwith to Southampton, where they were to embark, he himself going before to manage Matters as the Troops and Transports arrived. Whilst he was thus busied in the Imbarkation, he gave fresh Powers to Philip Morgan, to conclude a Treaty of Alliance with the Duke of Burgundy. This makes appear, that the Duke, who was still at the Court of France, held private Intelligence with Henry, and in all appearance contributed very much to the engaging him in this Undertaking. Their Treaty however was not concluded till two Years after.

A Plot against the King discovered.

Henry was preparing to set out about the latter End of July, or the Beginning of August. The greatest Part of his Troops were already embarked, when notice was given him of a Conspiracy against his Person, formed by such as he thought he had the least Reason to suspect. If we may believe the English Historians, the Court of France dreading the Issue of the War, had employed vast Sums of Money to bribe some Persons to kill the King. They made these Sums amount to a Million of French Livres, the which is not to be thought strange, considering the Quality of the Persons concerned in the Plot; namely, Richard Earl of Cambridge, Brother of the Duke of York; Henry Scroop Lord Treasurer, who commonly lay in the same Room

Room with the King; and Thomas Grey Earl of Northumberland, and Privy-Counsellor *. It is not certain however, that they had a Design upon the King's Life: At least the Earl of Cambridge's Confession, extant in the Collection of Publick Acts, contains nothing like it. It appears only, that they had conspired to set the Earl of March at their Head, and conduct him where they hoped they should be able to raise an Army, by making use of the Name of Richard II. as if he were still living. That if they could not deceive the People by that Means which had already been so often practised, their Intent was to publish a Manifesto in the Name of the Earl of March, inviting the People to restore that Prince to his Rights which were usurped by the House of Lancaster. As they could not make use of the Earl of March's Name, without having him in their Power, or at least of their Side, they could not help letting him into the Plot. The Earl was at a great Loss what to do when he was told the Secret. A Crown, which he believed belonged to him by Right, was well worth the Pains of running some Risk to obtain it. But on the other Hand, he was satisfied that the Conspirators acted not from a Motive of Justice or Affection for his Person: Besides, the Uncertainty of the Issue could not but dishearten him. Mean while, he was pressed very earnestly to enter into the Conspiracy. Not being able to resolve immediately, he desired him to consider of so important an Affair; and it was with great Difficulty that they gave him the rest of that Day. During that Interval, he made such Reflections, as induced him to go and acquaint the King with the whole Matter. Henry, surprised at the News, forthwith ordered the Conspirators to be apprehended, who confessing their Guilt, were condemned and executed. The Earls of Cambridge and Northumberland 1415.

Act. Pub.
IX. 300.The Authors punished.
P. 300.

* Though Thomas Grey is called here and by some of our Historians Earl of Northumberland, yet he could not be so, seeing Henry Percy, Son of Horspur, was restored to that Honour in the 2d of Henry V. as appears by the Parliament Rolls, 2 H. V. n. 17. Dugdale says, this Grey was of the Family of Lord Grey of Werk in Northumberland. Vol. II. P. 449.

1415.

thumberland were beheaded, and the Lord Scroop suffered the usual Punishment of Traitors. This was as it were the first Spark of that Fire which consumed in Process of Time the Two Houses of Lancaster and York. As the Earl of Cambridge had married a Sister of the Earl of March, it is very likely that he had engaged in the Plot, with a View to procure the Crown for Richard his Son, Heir apparent of that Earl, who had no Children.

Henry sets sail.

This Affair having detained Henry at Southampton longer than he imagined, he could not sail till the 18th or 19th of August. His Fleet consisted of Fifteen Hundred Transport Ships, on Board of which he had embarked Six Thousand Men at Arms, and Twenty Thousand Archers, making in all an Army of about Fifty Thousand Men. He was attended by the Earls of Dorset, Kent, Cornwall, Salisbury, Huntington, besides a great Number of other Noblemen. On the 21st of August he landed his Troops at Havre de Grace in Normandy, and without Loss of Time marched towards Harfleur, about nine Miles off. That Place was strong and well-stored. Just before Four Hundred Men at Arms had been sent thither, besides abundance of Gentlemen of the Neighbourhood, who came of their own Accord. The Garrison made a vigorous Defense, but however, in a little Time they were fain to capitulate, and promise to surrender the Place unless relieved within three Days. The Term being expired, and no Relief come, Henry took Possession of the Town, and expelling the Inhabitants, planted an English Colony in their Room, as Edward III. had formerly done at Calais.

Lands at Havre de Grace.

Takes Harfleur, and Peoples it with English.

Act. Pub.
IX. 313.

This Place being of the utmost Importance, Henry would not depart from thence till it was entirely repaired and put in a good State of Defense. Whilst he was employed in this Work, he sent a written Challenge to the Dauphin, offering to decide all their Differences by a single Combat between them Two. In the King's Notion the whole Kingdom of France was at Stake in these Disputes. If he directed himself to the Dauphin, it was on account of the King his Father's Distemper, which rendered him incapable of accepting such a Challenge. But as it was not in the the Dauphin's Power to hazard in a single Combat the Crown of France, which was not in his Possession yet, Henry offered, in case he should come off Conqueror, to let King Charles enjoy it during his Life. Moreover, he protested that this Proposal came wholly from himself, without his Council, or any of the Royal Family having any Hand in it; and therefore he pretended it could bring no Prejudice to his own or his Successors Rights. This Challenge was dated at his Town of Harfleur, September 16th, 1415. It does not appear that the Dauphin sent any Answer to it. The Truth is, the Offer was too disadvantageous on his Side, since he would have hazarded a Crown which his Father was in actual Possession of, and which he was naturally one Day to inherit; whereas Henry would have run the Risk of bare Pretensions only.

1415.

The taking of Harfleur might have made Henry rest satisfied with the Success of his first Campaign, which he had begun a little too late, had not the ill State of his Army given him a great deal of Vexation. The Flux, which was got amongst his Troops, had made and still did make such Ravage, that not above the fourth Part of his Army were in a Condition to bear Arms. This Distemper had not seized the common Soldiers only, but the most considerable Officers themselves were not free from it. The Bishop of Norwich and the Earl of Suffolk were already dead of it. The Duke of Clarence the King's Brother, the Earl of Arundel, and several other Officers of Distinction had been so dangerously ill of it, that they were obliged to return to England, in hopes of being cured there.

*Ill State of the English
Army.*

At the same Time Henry learned from all Hands that the French were drawing together their Forces with all speed in order to give him Battle. Till the taking of Harfleur the Court of France it seems would not believe the King of England intended to wage War in good earnest, and accordingly had made no Preparations for a Defence. But after the Loss of so important a Place, King Charles's Council easily perceived it was necessary to assemble all the Forces of the Kingdom, in order to put a Stop to the Progress of an Enemy, who began to be very formidable. The great

The French draw together an Army.

1415.
Henry resolves to retire to Calais.

Armament France was preparing, the ill State of the English Army, and the Approach of Winter, obliged Henry to think of retreating. He might it seems have re-embarked at Harfleur. But whether he thought that would look too much like running away, or whether he foresaw not all the Obstacles he afterwards encountered, or for some other unknown Reason, he came to a Resolution to retire by Land to Calais.

Difficulties
of the March.

The March he undertook was difficult, at a Season, when the Rains began to make the Roads very bad. But it became much more so by Accidents which he did not expect. The French having foreseen, or been informed of his Design, had broke down in all haste the Bridges, and spoiled the Causeys which were in his Rout, and destroyed, or removed into the fortified Towns, the Provisions and Forrage that he might have met with in the Country. On the other Hand, the Constable D' Albret, with a Body of Troops which he had drawn together, whilst the rest were getting ready, continually harrassed the English, and constrained them to march close together, and to be always upon their Guard. All these Difficulties hindered them from going forward so speedily as would have been necessary in order to get out of the ill Pass they were in.

He is not able to pass the Somme.

Amidst all these Rubs in his Way, Henry marched along the Somme, in hopes of being able to pass that River at the Ford of Blanquetaque, as Edward III had done the Day before the Battle of Crecy. But when he came there, he found that Pass rendered impracticable by being drove full of sharp Stakes, and defended moreover by a Body of Troops posted on the other Side. He was extremely concerned to find he could not put his Project in Execution. He lay under a Necessity however, either of passing the Somme, or resolving to return to Harfleur through the very same Difficulties he had already been exposed to, and without knowing when he came there, how to maintain his Army. In this Extremity he determined to march along the River to its very Fountain-head, though by so doing, he went very far out of his Way: As he advanced, he every where found

He resolves to go to the Fountain-Head.

found the Bridges broken down, and the Fords guarded by Troops, intrenched on the other Side. 1415.

As in the present Case, there was no Remedy but Patience, Henry took all possible Care to inspire his Troops with it, by bearing his share of the Wants and Hardships they laboured under. It is easy to judge, that these Hardships were by no means proper to stop the Course of the Distemper they were afflicted with, but on the contrary, great Numbers fell ill in the March. In fine, to compleat his Misfortune, Henry had Advice that the King of France was come to Roan, and had sent to the Constable fourteen Thousand Men at Arms, with all the Princes and great Lords of the Kingdom, except the Dukes of Berry and Burgundy. The Dauphin was very desirous of commanding the Army; but the King would not give him leave. The Constable, who had also drawn together abundance of other Troops, having received so strong a Reinforcement, called a Council of War, wherein it was unanimously resolved to give the English Battle. But as the French Generals thought themselves sure of Victory, considering the Superiority of their Numbers, they judged it best, instead of continuing to guard the Somme, to let the English Army pass over, and to go and post themselves in the way to Calais. This Resolution being taken, they went and expected their Enemies in the Earldom of St. Paul, to the end they might draw them over the Somme, into a Place where they should not be able to make a Retreat.

The Army suffers much in the March,

French Army reinforced.

They go and expect the English in the Road to Calais,

It is certain that by passing the River, Henry run into manifest Danger, since he had no other Course to take but to conquer or dye. It is true he might have turned back to Harfleur; but I cannot tell whether that was less hazardous, considering the Difficulties he must have encountered, and which he had not without infinite Pain and Trouble surmounted. Wherefore it is a Question which seems to me hard to be decided, whether Fighting was more to be dreaded than Retreating. Be that as it will, it is to be presumed that he chose what to him appeared the least hazardous, by continuing his March along the Somme, with a Resolution to go and face the Danger which waited for him.

Henry continues his March,

1415.
He passes
the Somme.

Offers to restore Harfleur.

His Offer rejected.

The French challenge
him.
His Answer.

He meets the Enemy, who offer him Battle; which he accepts.

him on the other Side. As the Passes were no longer defended, he found one between St. Quentin and Peronne, where he caused his Army to go over. But although this Obstacle, which hitherto had seemed the greatest, was removed, the English Army did not find their Case one jot altered for the better. Their Enemies, six Times more in Number, were ready to receive them upon their coming over; whom there was a Necessity of vanquishing in order to open a Way to Calais. The French Historians affirm, that Henry seeing himself in this wretched Situation, offered to restore Harfleur, and repair all the Damages he had caused in France since his Landing, if he might have Liberty to march on unmolested: But that his Offer was rejected.

On the contrary, the Constable and Princes that were in the French Army, sent three Heralds to offer him Battle, leaving to his Choice the Time and Place. Henry replied, That he had been a good while upon his March to Calais; that it was their Fault they had not fought him, and that in case they had any such Design, there was no occasion to appoint the Time or Place; that he was resolved to pursue his March, and they should always find him ready to receive them.

The French Army being posted in his Rout, there was no possibility of going by them without fighting. He resolved therefore to prepare for a Battle. On the 22d of October the French Generals sent him Word by a Herald, that on Friday following (a), they would give him Battle. Henry, who had before resolved what to do, accepted the Challenge, and presented the Herald with a Robe worth two Hundred Crowns. During the three Days before the Battle Henry never ceased to inspire his Troops with Courage, by promising to reward their Valour, and by using all other Means most conducive to that End. He set before them the Glory of their Ancestors, who obtained the famous Victories of Crecy and Poitiers, and demonstrated to them the Necessity they were under of conquering, in order to free themselves from their present Calamities, and

19

(a) October 25th, to avoid still much greater. His Exhortations had so wonderful an Effect, that Officers and Soldiers, far from dreading the great Numbers of their Enemies, wanted nothing more than to join Battle with them. The Day before the Fight, Henry having sent David Gam, a Welsh Captain, to view the Posture of the Enemy, this brave Officer brought back Word, that there were enough to kill, enough to take Prisoners, and enough to run away. This courageous Assurance pleased the King mightily, as it was a good Sign that his Men were firmly resolved to do their Duty. Meanwhile the French were making merry in their Camp, holding themselves sure of Victory, by Reason of their Numbers. Mezerai owns, that they were four Times as many as the English. Monstrelet says six Times. This Diversity may partly proceed from Mezerai's reckoning all the Soldiers, sick and well, in the English Army, and from the other's meaning only such as were in a Condition to fight. The English Writers make the Difference between the two Armies much greater, affirming the French amounted to one Hundred and fifty Thousand, and the English but to nine Thousand. Be this as it will, it is certain the Superiority of the French was vastly great. But what Odds soever there was between the two Armies, as to Number, there was another and no less considerable Disparity with regard to the different State they were in. The English, troubled for the most Part with a Flux, which had stuck close to them ever since their Departure from Harfleur, were moreover harrassed with a long march of a Month, in very bad Weather and through an Enemies Country. They had all along been in Want of Provisions, and would doubtless have been all starved to Death, if the exact Discipline, which the King caused to be observed had not engaged the Country People to supply them with Victuals, for the sake of selling them at an extravagant Rate. The French on the contrary were fresh and healthy, abounding with plenty of Provisions, and labouring under no Inconveniency. If we may believe the English Historians, so confident of Success were the French Leaders, that they sent to the King to know what he intended to give for his 1415.

Firmness of the King and his Troops.

Great disproportion between the two Armies.

Confidence of the French.

1415. his Ransom, when he should be in their Hands. Henry despising this Bravado, replied, as some tell us, That it would quickly be known, whose Business it was to compound for the Ransoms.

*The two Armies are drawn up in order of Battle.
Blunder of the Constable.*

On the 25th of October, the Day appointed for the Battle, the two Armies were drawn up in Battalia at Break of Day. The Constable D' Albret committed on this Occasion an unpardonable Blunder, in chusing for the Field of Battle a narrow Piece of Ground, flanked on one Side by a Rivulet, and on the other by a large Wood. By which Means he lost all the Advantage which the Superiority of Numbers, and especially in Horse, could give him. It is most certain that this General ought to have posted himself in a large and open Place, where he might have had it in his Power to surround the English, who were but a Handful of Men in comparison of his Army. But by drawing up his Troops in Battalia upon such a narrow Piece of Ground, he was forced to make his Front no larger than that of the Enemy, and so deprived himself of a very manifest Advantage. Neither can it be said, that the Choice of the Field of Battle was not entirely in his Breast. Seeing the English were marching for Calais, it was in his Power to plant himself in some spacious Plain, capable of containing his whole Army, and where he might have had room to fight all at once. So that one cannot enough wonder at his Blindness, which can be ascribed to nothing but his Presumption. His Design, it seems, was to dam up that narrow Passage, to the end the English might not be able to proceed, not considering that this Precaution could not be of any Advantage but to the weaker Side. I have dwelt a little upon this false Step, because in all likelihood it was the principal Cause of the bad Success the French had in this Day's Action. The Constable, blinded by the Number of his Troops, drew them up, as I said, on this narrow Ground, but so close together, that it was easy to foresee Confusion and Disorder would ensue during the Battle. He divided his Army into three Bodies; the First of which he commanded himself, and with him were the Dukes of Orleans, and Bourbon, the Earls of Eu, Vendôme, dôme, Richemont, the famous Marshal Boucicaut Grand Master of the Cross-Bow Men, the Lord Dampier Admiral of France, the Dauphin of Auvergne, and several other Officers of the greatest Distinction. All these Princes and Lords thought themselves happy in being in the first Line, persuaded as they were, that there would be nothing left for the other two to do. The Duke of Alençon commanded the Second Body, with the Duke of Bar, the Earls of Fandemont, Nevers, Salines, Rouss, and Grand-Pre. At the Head of the Third Line, were the Earls of Marle, Dampmartin, Fauquenbergh and the Lord de Lauroi.

Whilst the French were drawing up in Battle-array, Henry detached a Body of four Hundred Spear-Men, to go and post themselves out of Sight of the Enemy, behind the Wood on the Left-hand of the Field of Battle. He lodged moreover two Hundred Archers in a low Meadow-Ground covered with some Bushes on the Right. In drawing up his Army, he could make but two Lines by Reason of the small Number of his Troops. Edward Duke of York commanded the First, attended by the Lords Beaumont, Willoughby and Stanhope *. The King put himself at the Head of the Second, with a Gold Crown on his Helmet, which served for a Crest, and near him was the Standard of England. In this Posture he expected the French to come and attack him. In the mean Time he went through all the Ranks, exhorting his Troops not to be afraid of a Multitude of raw and undisciplined Soldiers. He represented to them, that the obtaining of Victories depended not on Numbers, but on Bravery, and above all on the Assistance of God, in whom he admonished them to place their whole Trust. Perceiving that the French kept their Standing, he sent for some of his principal Officers, and said to them with a chearful Countenance, My Friends, Since they will not begin, it is our Business to open a Passage with our Swords. Let us charge them in the Name of the ever blessed Trinity.

Precautions taken by the King before the Batt.e.

* There was no Lord Stanhope then, Sir Philip Stanhope not being created Baron of Shelford, till the 14th of King James, and afterwards in the 14th of Charles I. Earl of Cheshfield. Instead of Stanhope here, Speed and others read Fanhope.

1415. Trinity. Having said these Words, he gave the Signal for The English Battle. Immediately the Soldiers of the foremost Ranks begin the having removed the Stakes which they had set up before Charge. them to resist the Fury of the Cavalry, the whole Army, shouting as usual, put themselves in Motion. Having moved forward a little, they made a Halt, expecting the Enemy to come on; but finding the French stirred not, they continued their March in good Order. As soon as they came within Bow-Shot, the foremost Ranks pitched the Stakes *, interweaving them one among another, and bending them a little towards the Enemy. At the same Time a Body of chosen Archers advancing some Paces, began at a small Distance to let fly upon the Enemy a Shower of Arrows three Foot long, which being shot by Men of Dexterity and Vigour, did the greater Execution among the French, as they stood extremely close together and had scarce room to move. The French Cavalry advancing at length to repulse the Archers, these last nimbly retreated behind the Stakes with a wonderful Discipline, in which the King had exercised them himself for some Days. Mean while the two Hundred Bow-Men who lay concealed in the Meadow, rising up on a sudden, let fly their Arrows among the Cavalry, who were put in a Disorder so much the greater, as the Horses sunk up to their Knees in the Ground softened by the Rains. The English seeing them in Confusion, threw away their Bows, and fell upon their Enemies Sword in Hand. It is affirmed, that the English, for the most Part, were fain to fight quite naked from the Waste downwards, by Reason of their Distemper. However as the first Line of the French consisted of all the best Troops in their Army, this Charge, as vigorous as it was, was repulsed with some Loss on the Side of the English. But that was not capable of disheartening Men that were determined to conquer or dye. After they had taken Breath a little, they charged again with such Resolution, that it was not possible for their Enemies to stand the Shock.
 This

Monstrelet

* They were studded with Iron at both Ends, and about six Foot long. These were set up by the Direction of the Duke of York.

This second Attack was so much the more difficult to be repulsed, as at the same Time the French felt themselves flanked by the English Horse, who had lain in Ambush behind the Wood. Then it was that Disorder was every where spread among the Troops so vigorously pressed by their Enemies, who flew without Mercy all that came in their Way. The first Line of the French having at length taken to flight, after seeing the Constable killed, with a great Number of other Officers, and the most Part of the Princes and Generals made Prisoners, the English found themselves stopped by the second Line, which came to repair the Disorder.

1415.

*The first Line of the French
routed.*

Mean while, Henry having advanced with his second Line, as the first gained Ground, stood ready to support his Men who would have been in Danger of being put to the Rout, in Case he had been at too great a Distance. Whilst the first Body after having so bravely fought, were filing off to the Right and Left, in order to make Way for the King, and to go and rally in his Rear, Henry alighting from his Horse, presented himself to the Enemy with an undaunted Countenance. The Duke of Alençon, Prince of the Blood-Royal of France, advanced at the Head of his Body with great Intrepidity, not questioning but he should be able by his Conduct and Valour to wipe out the Disgrace his Countrymen had just received. He had detached eighteen resolute Fellows, with Orders to keep close to the King of England, and never leave him till they had either slain or taken him Prisoner. Henry for his Part marching on with a Fierceness heightened by the Success of his foremost Troops, charged the second Line with a Valour equal to that of the most renowned Heroes in History. He fought on Foot at the Head of his Men, rushing among his Enemies, as if he had forgot that the Fate of his Army depended upon his Life.

Henry fights on Foot at the Head of his Troops.

Mean Time the eighteen Cavaliers who had undertaken to dispatch him, having opened their Way to him, one of them gave him such a Blow with a Battle-Ax on the Head, that it stunned him for a while, though the Goodness of his Helmet had resisted its Violence. At the same Time,

He is exposed to great Danger.

1415. the rest were striving with all their Power to come at him. In all appearance, he would hardly have escaped the Fury of these Desperadoes, had not David Gam the brave Welsh Captain, with two other Officers of the same Nation, saved his Life at the Expence of their own. The King, who had recovered his Senses, seeing them extended at his Feet and still alive, knighted them all three, being unable, in the Condition they were in, to reward their Loyalty any other way. At the same Time the eighteen Frenchmen who still made prodigious Efforts to execute their Desigh, were all killed upon the Spot.

Henry's great Courage.

He is knocked down on his Knees.

The French are put in disorder.

The Heat of the Battle increasing, Henry still more animated by the Danger he had run, gave signal Proofs of his Valour, and drew upon him the bravest of the Enemies. The Duke of Gloucester his Brother who fought by his Side, being knocked down with the Blow of a Club, he covered him a good while with his own Body to prevent his being killed outright. By this bold Action, he brought himself into such Danger, that at length he received on his Head a Blow which made him fall on his Knees. But his Guard, immediately advancing, repulsed the Enemy, and gave him Time to rise again. The Hazard the King was exposed to, and the Wonders he performed, inspired his Troops with a sort of Fury. On a sudden, as it were by Consent, the English Soldiers encouraging one another, came headlong upon their Enemies, and by this violent and unexpected Attack, put them in such Disorder, that their Leaders could never repair it. Henry improving this Advantage, pressed them vigorously in order to hinder them from recovering out of their Surprise, being well aware that this was the lucky Moment on which the Victory was to depend. Their Disorder increasing more and more by Reason of their great Numbers and want of Room, they began at length to retreat as they fought, and in such a manner as plainly showed they would quickly take to their Heels.

The Duke of Alençon enraged to see the Battle lost by the Flight of the second Line, and despairing that the Third would be able to renew the Fight, generously resolved to die die honourably, rather than turn his Back and live to be a Witness of his Country's Disgrace. Regardless of a Life he was determined to lose, he took with him a small Number of brave and resolute Persons, and furiously making Way with his Sword through the English Troops, he every where sought the King of England, in hopes of revenging by one single Stroke, the Loss France had that Day sustained. It was no hard Matter to find Henry, who thought of nothing less than concealing himself. The Moment the Duke saw him, he ran at him, and crying aloud that he was the Duke of Alençon, discharged on his Head a Blow with such Violence, that it carried off one half of the Gold Crown on the Top of his Helmet. Henry not having been able to parry the Blow, was not slow to revenge it. In return, he struck the Duke to the Ground, and with repeated Blows slew two of his brave Attendants. In an Instant, the Duke was surrounded by a Crowd of Enemies who put an End to his Life, maugre all the Endeavours of the King to save him. The Death of the Duke of Alençon having quite bereaved his Troops of all Courage, they openly took to Flight.

Alençon gives the King a furious Blow:

Who knocks him down.

The third Line of the French being still fresh and in good Order, might have renewed the Battle: But their Hearts failing at the Sight of the Slaughter which had been made and was still making, it was not in the Power of the Leaders to bring them to charge. So that finding themselves reduced to a Necessity of retreating without fighting, they left the Run-aways of the second Line exposed to the Fury of their Pursuers, who were close at their Heels. Then it was that the English having nothing to do but to kill and take Prisoners, exercised Pity or Cruelty, according as every one was naturally inclined. As it was impossible for the French in the Disorder they were in to rally, and as their Numbers were an Obstacle to their Flight, they voluntarily offered themselves to Death or Captivity, as their victorious Enemies pleased. Mean while the Troops that had retreated without fighting, were still in Sight at some Distance, and seemed resolved to stand their Ground against Enemies harrassed with so long a Battle. However

The third Line of the French retreat without fighting.

1415. the King perceiving they were still more numerous than his Army, sent them word by a Herald, that unless they immediately marched off they were to expect no Quarter. This bold Message had the Effect he expected. Whether their Troops were not fully resolved what Course they should take, or whether they were apprehensive of falling into the Hands of an implacable Enemy, in case they should make an Attempt and not succeed, they retreated and left Henry Master of the Field of Battle.

The Occasion of the King's killing all the Prisoners.

Finding himself thus sure of the Victory, he thought he had nothing more to do, when on a sudden word was brought him, that the Enemies were in his Rear, and had already plundered his Camp. Surprized at this unexpected Accident, he hastily ran to the Top of a little Hillock between the Army and the Camp, to take a View of these new Enemies. He beheld indeed great Disorder among his Baggage, and saw the Troops which he had left to guard the Camp, dispersed about the Field, and endeavouring to save themselves by Flight. This Sight causing him to imagine that the Enemies had rallied in order to renew the Fight, he gave Order that the Prisoners should be all slain, except only some of the greatest Note. This Order being forthwith put in Execution, he rallied his Troops, and marched directly to the Enemies, who took care not to stay his Coming. They were a Company of Runaways, headed by Robert de Bournonville, who retiring betimes out of the Battle, and knowing the English Camp was but weakly guarded, went and pillaged it whilst the two Armies were engaged. The Duke of Burgundy would have severely punished the Captain of these Plunderers who was his Subject, for having been the Occasion of so great a Disaster; but the Earl of Charolois his Son found Means to save his Life. 'Tis said, the Earl had been presented with a Sword set with Diamonds, found among the King's Baggage. 'Tis pity so glorious a Victory should have been sullied by this hasty Massacre. It may however be excused by the Impossibility of the English being able to guard their Prisoners, and by the just Fears the King might be in, that that these same Prisoners would turn against him, during the Fight he saw himself upon the Point of renewing. 1415-

Nothing more opposing the King's victorious Arms, his first Care was to return God Thanks for so signal a Victory which he had so little reason to expect, and publickly to acknowledge that it was entirely owing to the Assistance of his All-powerful Arm. After having performed this just Duty, he sent for a French Herald which was in the Army, and required him to declare to whom the Victory was to be ascribed. The Herald answered, that the Victory was his beyond all Dispute. Then the King asked him the Name of a Castle which he saw before him near the Field of Battle, and being told it was called Azincourt, he said, that to all Posterity this Day's Action should be called the Battle of Azincourt. As the Fight began at Ten in the Morning, and lasted till almost Five in the Afternoon, Henry not thinking fit to continue his March, for fear of fatiguing his Army too much, returned to Masconcelles, where he had encamped the Night before.

Henry returns God Thanks for his Victory.

Calls it the Battle of Azincourt.

In this memorable Battle so fatal to France, the French lost the Constable d'Albret, the Duke of Alençon Prince of the Blood, the Duke of Brabant, and the Earl of Nevers, Brothers of the Duke of Burgundy, the Duke of Bar, the Earls of Vaudemont, Marle, Roussi, Fanquenbergh, and many more Officers of Note, besides Ten Thousand private Soldiers. An English Historian says, that among the slain were one Archbishop *, three Dukes, six Earls, ninety Barons, fifteen Hundred Knights, and seven Thousand Esquires or Gentlemen. Among the Prisoners, who would have been very numerous had it not been for the Massacre after the Battle, the most eminent were the Dukes of Orleans and Bourbon, the Earls of Eu, Vendôme, Richmont, Etouteville, and Marshal Boucicaut. On the Side of the English there were slain only the Duke of York, the young Earl of Suffolk, and, if we believe some of the English Historians, not above four Knights, one Squire, and twenty-eight common Soldiers. Some however with greater

The Loss of
the French,

and of the English.

1415. greater Probability affirm, the English lost four Hundred Men. Mezerai mounts the Number to sixteen Hundred, and brings down the Loss of the French to six Thousand. It is very common on these Occasions to see the like Diversity among the Historians of two opposite Sides.

Henry continues his March to Calais.

Aët. Pub. IX. 787.

On the Morrow the King began his March again towards Calais. In going over the Field of Battle, he took Occasion to speak much in the Praise of his Troops: But at the same Time he exhorted those about him not to be puffed up with a Victory which was gained purely by the miraculous Assistance of the Lord of Hosts. During his March, he was extremely civil to the French Princes his Prisoners. He told them, that he had not obtained the Victory by the Superiority of his Merit, but because God was pleased to make use of him as his Instrument, to punish the Sins of the French Nation: That the Advantages he might expect from his Victory, were so far from making him averse to a Peace, that he was even more inclined to it than he was before the Battle.

The Duke of Burgundy challenges the King.

The King refuses to accept it.

Some Days after the Duke of Burgundy sent him a written Challenge, and let him know by a Herald that he intended to revenge the Death of his Brothers. Apparently the Duke of Brabant and Earl of Nevers were put to Death in the Slaughter of the Prisoners after the Battle. Henry willing to keep fair with that Prince whom he still hoped to gain to his Interests, returned a very mild Answer. He told the Herald, as he gave him back the Gauntlet which he had at first received from his Hand, that the French themselves could witness he was not guilty of the Death of the Duke's Brothers, but that his own Subjects were answerable for their Blood. This he said, because Bourbonville, who occasioned the killing of the Prisoners, was a Burgundian.

Henry returns to England.

Aët. Pub. IX. 377.

About the Middle of November Henry embarked for England, taking along with him the principal Prisoners. He met in his Passage with a violent Storm, which put him in extreme Danger of his Life, and even caused some of his Ships to founder. At last, after enduring great Hardships, he arrived on the 16th of November. He was received in England

England with the Acclamations usual on such Occasions. The People were never tired with praising a Prince that had rendered the English Name so formidable and glorious. His first Care was to appoint a Day of publick Thanksgiving for the happy Success of his Arms. Then he caused the Bodies of the Duke of York and of the Earl of Suffolk, who lost their Lives in the Battle, to be honourably interred *. The Duke of York leaving no Issue, Richard his Nephew, Son of the Earl of Cambridge beheaded at Southampton, was his Heir.

1415.

The Wound France had just received was not so great on account of the Advantages the King of England reaped by his Victory, which gained him not a single Foot of Land, as for its being the Occasion of the Civil Wars breaking out a-new with more Fury than ever. The Duke of Burgundy resolving to take Advantage of the present Juncture, claimed the Administration of Affairs again, from which he had been excluded some time since, and particularly by the Peace of Arras. He alledged, that now the Kingdom was threatned with utter Ruin, a Prince of the Blood, First Peer, and doubly Peer of the Realm, was indispensably bound in Duty to aid the King with his Counsels, and could not be debarred from coming to Court without Injustice and Danger. But as he was well aware that his Reasons would be of no great weight, unless backed by Force, he approached Paris with an Army, and seized some Posts about the City. The Dauphin, not being able to bear the Thoughts of admitting to Court the Duke of Burgundy, though his Father-in-law, sent for the Earl of Armagnac, and gave him the Constable's Sword. This Earl, sworn Enemy of the Duke of Burgundy, did not spare those who adhered to the Duke, and were commonly called the Burgundians. He ordered some to be hanged, and great Numbers to be impritoned, and by that Means heightned the Animosity of the two Factions to such

The Troubles are renewed in France.

The Earl of Armagnac made Constable.

He persecutes the Burgundians.

* Edward Duke of York, Son of Edmund de Langley, Son of Edward III. was buried in his Collegiate Church at Fotheringhay in Northamptonshire. And Michael de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk, Son of him that died of the Flux before Harflour, was interred at Encelme in Oxfordshire.

1415. such a Degree, that from thence forward nothing was capable of uniting them against the common Enemy. The Dauphin seconded the Constable's Revenge, and never minded the restoring the ruinous Affairs of the Kingdom, the Government whereof was in his Hands. Shortly after, namely, on the 24th of December, this Prince was poisoned.

The Dauphin poisoned.

John his Brother becomes Dauphin.

Is opposed by the Constable.

Henry is applied to by both Parties.

By the Death of Lewis, the new Constable remained sole Master of the Person of the King, and of the Government of the Kingdom, till such time as John Duke of Touren should return, to whom the Title of Dauphin was devolved, and who was then in Hainault with the Earl his Father-in-law. This young Prince having resolved to espouse neither Side, sent Orders to both the Factions to lay down their Arms. The Duke of Burgundy, who was losing his Time before Lagny, obeyed, pretending he did so out of pure deference to the Dauphin's Orders, and retired into his Dominions. But the Constable was not so tractable. As he had the King's Person in his Power, he did not think the Dauphin had any Right to command him, till he should be actually in Possession of the Regency, which he was bent to oppose, unless he would declare against the Burgundians. It was this that hindered the Dauphin from returning to Court.

All this while it was next to impossible that France could take any just Measures for her Defence against the Attacks she was threatened with from England. The Duke of Burgundy was privately treating with Henry. The Earl of Hainault was likewise courting that Monarch to put the Dauphin his Son-in-law in Possession of the Regency. On the other Side, Lewis of Anjou, King of Sicily, who was then Head of the Orleans-Faction, was projecting how to deprive the Dauphin of his Birth-right, by procuring the Crown for Charles Earl of Ponthieu his Son-in-law. To compass his Ends, he thought the surest Method he could take, was to make sure of the Assistance of England. Thus, all France as it were with one Consent, though with different Views, earnestly sought the Alliance of the English, against whom the whole Nation would have have firmly united, if private Interest had not prevailed above the Good of the Publick. In this manner passed over the Year 1415, which the Battle of Azincourt has for ever rendered memorable.

1415.

The Consternation France was under, and the Dissentions between the Duke of Burgundy and the Constable, seemed to promise Henry fresh Laurels, if he had continued the War. Nevertheless, that Prince, whose Wisdom equalled his Valour, very prudently steered a quite different Course. He judged, that by fomenting the Troubles of France, and inspiring the two Factions with Jealousy, he should procure more certain and lasting Advantages, than by Means of his Arms. The Truth is, by pushing the French too vigorously, he ran the Risk of uniting them all against him: In which case, in all likelihood his Advantages would have been but inconsiderable. But by giving them some Respite, he left them at liberty to destroy one another. Wherefore, contrary to every one's Expectation, he laid aside his military Affairs for near eighteen Months, and betook himself entirely to the Business of Negotiation, which afforded him the Prospect of less doubtful Advantages. He continued not however in a State of Idleness. The Particulars of what passed in 1416, and in part of the Year following, will show, how diligent he was in the Prosecution of his Projects.

1416.

Henry purposes to gain the Duke of Burgundy:

Henry's chief Aim was to gain the Duke of Burgundy, who had already shewn an Inclination to make an Alliance with him. The succeeding in this Design he perceived would be of more Advantage to him than the gaining another such Battle as that of Azincourt. To this therefore all his Endeavours tended, as to his main Point. In order to be able to attain his Ends, it was necessary that the Affairs of France should remain in the Posture they were in at present. There was a Necessity that the Constable and the other Heads of that Faction, should always have it in their Power to persecute the Duke of Burgundy. This was the only Thing which could carry that Prince to play a desperate Game, which he beheld with Dread, and which the sole Desire of Revenge was capable of putting him upon. If 1416. by the continuance of the War, France should have lost Towns and Battles, the Constable, who held the Reins of the Government, would doubtless have forfeited all his Credit. By that means the Duke of Burgundy would have infallibly got into the Regency again, and no longer stood in need of the English. This is the true Reason of Henry's consenting to all the Proposals offered him, either for concluding a Truce, or for renewing the Treaties of Peace. Mean while, his and the Duke of Burgundy's Envoys went backwards and forwards from London to Flanders, and from Flanders to London, ever under Colour of a Treaty of Commerce, in which fresh Difficulties were continually started, the better to hide their main Design.

Why this Negotiation was kept secret.

It was not without Reason that both Sides kept secret this Negotiation. The Duke, who would not make an Alliance with the King but in the last Extremity, was afraid that the Discovery of his Intention would alienate from him the Affections of the French, and especially of the Parisians. Henry had Reason to fear on his Part, that in case the Court of France came to the Knowledge of this Negotiation; they would find Means to break his Measures. In the mean while his desisting entirely from War ever since the Battle of Azincourt, might well cause his Designs to be somewhat suspected. But the Arrival of the Emperor Sigismund rid him of his Fears, as it gave him room to pretend that he discontinued the War at the Instance of that Prince.

*Sigismund arrives in France.
Mezerai.*

He proposes a Truce, which is rejected.

In the Beginning of the Year, Sigismund came to Paris. He gave out himself that the sole End of his Journey was to make Peace between the two Crowns of France and England. This Design was noble and charitable, and worthy a Christian Monarch, granting it was wholly without private Views. But several Circumstances make it suspected, that he had undertaken this Voyage to befriend Henry rather than France, and in hopes of finding his own private Benefit in it. Upon his Arrival in France, he proposed a four Years Truce between the two Kings; but the Court rejected his Proposal. The French Historians tax the Constable with refusing this Truce, out of private Interest.

but

but without showing wherein the War could be of any Advantage to him. I suppose he was then projecting the Siege of Harfleur, which he began in June following. It may be he perceived that the Emperor was not an impartial Mediator. Be that as it will, Sigismund finding he could do nothing at Paris, came into England in the Month of March. The English Historians take notice, that being about to land, he was met by the Duke of Gloucester and some other Lords, who stepping into the Water with their drawn Swords, stopped the Boat. Surprised at this Reception, he asked the Reason of it; the Duke told him, that if he was come to claim any Authority in England, they had Orders to forbid his landing; but if he came only as a Mediator of Peace, he should meet with all the Respect due to his Imperial Dignity. This was to warn him not to take the Liberty of acting with any Authority in England, as he had done in France during his Stay there.

1416,
He is gone into England.

The Arrival of Sigismund at London was preceeded by that of William of Bavaria, Earl of Holland and Zealand, who was come upon the same Errand. These two Princes quickly saw they should find it a difficult Matter to procure a Peace. Henry added to his former Demands, the Town of Harfleur with Part of the adjacent Territory for the Maintenance of the Garrison. On the other Hand, France keeping to her first Offers, would not hear a word of Peace, unless Henry would restore Harfleur. So that the two Mediators perceiving it was almost impossible to make a Peace, were satisfied with getting the two Kings to consent to a Truce for three Years, during which Harfleur should remain in Trust in their Hands, for certain Securities which the French Prisoners in England had obliged themselves to give. But just as the Treaty was going to be signed, the Prisoners fell from their Word. The Constable, who was resolved to besiege Harfleur, had not agreed to this Negotiation but purely to amuse Henry and hinder him from diving into his Design.

The Earl of Holland and he got the two Kings to consent to a Truce.

Act. Pub. IX. 787.

France falls off.

1416.
Conflict between the Earl of Dorset, and the Constable of France.

Shortly after he carried King Charles to Roan, under some Pretence; his Aim was to be ready at Hand against the coming of some Genoese Ships, which were to join the French Fleet in order to invest Harfleur by Sea. He managed Matters so privately that Henry, not having the least Suspicion of his Design, neglected to reinforce the Garrison. During the French Court's being at Roan, the Earl of Dorset Governour of Harfleur, made an Incurſion even to the Gates of that City, and carried off a great Booty. But he could not retire ſo ſpeedily but that he was overtaken by the Constable who gained ſome Advantage over him. On the Morrow, the Constable ſtill preſſing the English who were haſtily retreating, conſtrained them to halt and ſtand upon their Deſenſe. In this ſecond Skirmiſh, the Earl of Dorset, though inferior in Number of Troops, had his Revenge, and compelled his Enemy to retire as faſt as he could to Roan.

The Constable be-ſieges Harfleur.

This Check prevented not the Constable from continuing his Preparations for the Siege of Harfleur. Immediately upon the Arrival of the Genoese Ships, he ordered his Troops whom he had diſperſed on Purpoſe, to get together again at a certain Place, where he came and headed them in Perſon. Then he marched directly to Harfleur, where he was not expected. So much did the English imagine the French unable to make any Attempt. Whiſt the Constable beſieged the Town by Land, the Viſcount of Narbonne blocked it up by Sea, ſo that nothing could go in or out. Henry was exceedingly vexed to be thus over-reached by the Constable. He was ſenſible then that the Negotiation was intended only to amuſe him, and therefore was the more provoked to do all that lay in his Power to break his Enemies Meaſures. He had a Mind, in his Turn, to uſe Cunning, and try to circumvent the Constable. With this View he made as if he was wholly inclined to a Peace, and demanded an Interview with his Couſin, for ſo he called the King of France then, whereas before he ſtiled him his Adverſary. He was in hopes that in Caſe an Interview was granted, a Truce would enſue, which would give him Time to relieve Harfleur; but his Demand was rejected.

Henry tries in vain to amuſe France.
Act. Pub.
IX. 365,
366.

After

After this, he gave Morgan Commission directly to demand a Truce. But the Court of France took Care not to give him such an Advantage at the present Juncture. In fine, perceiving that the Constable was not a Man to be played the Fool with, he commanded a Fleet to be fitted out, resolving to go himself and relieve the Place. He depended upon the Valour and Experience of the Earl of Dorset the Governour, well knowing he would do his utmost to give him Time to come to his Relief. In this he was not mistaken; for although the Siege was begun about the Middle of June, it was in no great Forwardness at the End of July. So that Henry having had Time to equip his Fleet, was in a readiness to embark in Person. But the Emperor dissuaded him from hazarding himself in an Expedition of this Nature, wherein all his Prudence could not avail to prevent the Accidents which might happen at Sea. The King yielding to the Emperor's Instances, gave the Command of the Succours to the Duke of Bedford his Brother, who set Sail about the End of July. It was not long before he fell in with the Enemy's Fleet lying before Harfleur. The Viscount de Narbonne putting himself in a Posture of Defence, withstood for some Time the Efforts of the English; but at length he was forced to yield them the Victory, after having seen five Genoese Caracks taken, and several of his own Ships sunk. Nothing more preventing the Duke of Bedford from throwing the Succours into the Town, the Constable quitted the Siege and marched off.

Whilst these Things were doing, the Duke of Burgundy kept on his secret Negotiations with Henry, under divers Pretences. One while it was to renew the Truce between England and Flanders; another while about some Affairs relating to the Church, which were depending before the Council of Constance. In May, the Truce I just mentioned which was to expire the 15th of June, had been renewed for a Year, and yet the Duke of Burgundy sent four Ambassadors more to England. In the Beginning of August the King appointed Commissioners to treat with them about some Ecclesiastical Affairs. This publick Commission served as a Blind to carry on the private Conferences. But by another 1416.

He resolves to go and relieve Harfleur.

He is dissuaded from it by the Emperor Sends the Duke of Bedford;
P. 371.

Who breaks
the French Fleet.

Negotiation between the King and Duke of Burgundy continues
Act. Pub.
IX. 332,
364, 374.

1416.
Aug. 5.

Aug. 7.
P. 375.

They agree upon an Interview at Calais.

another of the same Date, the Commissioners were empowered to agree with the Ambassadors upon an Interview between the King and the Duke of Burgundy. This Negotiation must needs have been in good Forwardness already, since two Days after the King dispatched Orders to several Officers to be in a readiness to attend him beyond Sea, where he was to have an Interview with some of his Enemies. This plainly enough shows that the Duke's frequent Embassies were designed for quite another Thing than the treating about Trade or Church-Affairs. That Prince had now been a long Time in Suspence about concluding his Treaty with Henry. As he was of the Blood-Royal of France, and first Peer of the Realm, he was very sensible that an Alliance of that Nature was directly contrary to his Honour and Duty. Besides, such a Step could not but do him a Prejudice in France among his own Party. For these Reasons, he had hitherto been satisfied with keeping the Negotiation on Foot, in order not to bring it to a conclusion but in Case of Necessity. The Earl of Armagnac's Revenge at length hurried the Duke on to enter into this Alliance, which doubtless he would have put off longer, or it may be, never done, if he had not been as it were drove to it by the Persecution of his Enemies.

The Dauphin and Duke of Burgundy concert Measures.

I have already taken notice that the Constable d' Armagnac, had under divers Pretences, prevented John the Dauphin then in Hainault from returning to Court. The young Prince not being able to bear to be thus over-ruled by this proud Minister, longed to be at the Head of Affairs, and to stand Neuter between the two Factions, the which would gain him the Esteem and Regard of both Parties. But it was not possible, since he had no Forces at his Disposal but the Earl of Hainault's his Father-in-law, which were not strong enough to enable him to put such a Project in Execution against the Constable's Will. Mean time, the Duke of Burgundy plainly perceiving there was no likelihood of his getting again into the Government as long as the Constable had the King's Person in his Power, thought it his best way to strengthen himself with the Assistance of the new Dauphin. With this View he had conferred in the Beginning of the Year at Valenciennes, with him and the Earl of Hainault, and they had agreed that the Dauphin should try by fair Means to be admitted to Court, that he might take the Place due to his Birth : That in Case he succeeded, he should carry the Duke along with him : But if he failed, they should concert other Measures to oust the Constable and free the King. Pursuant to this Resolution, the Dauphin and Earl of Hainault repaired to Campiegne, from whence the Earl went alone to Paris, to mediate the Return of the Prince his Son-in-law. Upon the first mention of recalling the Duke of Burgundy, the Constable took him up short, and plainly told him that the Dauphin should never be admitted to the King his Father's Court, unless he openly declared himself an Enemy of the Burgundian Faction. The Earl of Hainault seeing his Obstinacy, could not forbear uttering some Threats, which made the Constable and his Party sensible that the Dauphin intended to rely upon the Assistance of the Duke. This was the Reason, that in order to prevent the Mischief which this Union might do them, they resolved to dispatch him out of the way. A few Days after the Dauphin was poisoned to Death at Campiegne the 16th of April 1416, and not in 1417, as we find it in the Abridgment of Mézerai. The King of Sicily was suspected of having done this Deed, in order to make way for Prince Charles his Son-in-law. If he was guilty, his Death, which happened presently after, hindered him from reaping any Benefit by it.
the

1416.

The Dauphin is poisoned.

By the Death of John, Charles his Brother Earl of Ponthieu became Dauphin and Heir-apparent to the Crown. This young Prince immediately espoused the Party of the Armagnacs, for so the Orleans-Faction was then called. By that Means the Duke of Burgundy was more out of Hopes than ever, and the Earl of Armagnac kept at the Head of the Government, nothing being done without his Orders. The Hatred he bore the Duke of Burgundy caused him to let slip no Opportunity of persecuting the Burgundians, who were very numerous at Paris. The severe and tyrannical manner in which he behaved to all the World, joined Charles his Brother succeeds him

The Burgundians persecuted.

1416.

*The Duke of Burgundy does Homage to Henry.
Act. Pub.
IX. 383.*

to an extreme Greediness, induced at length the Parisians of the Burgundian Party to lay a Plot to introduce their Head into the City. The Conspiracy coming to light, the Constable took occasion from thence to exercise his Rage upon the whole Party to such a Degree, that the Duke of Burgundy did not think himself any longer obliged to keep any Measures with the Court. Immediately, to let the World see his Resentment, he concluded with the King of England a Truce for all their respective Dominions, not excepting those he held in France. But his Revenge did not stop here. His Ambassadors, as I said before, agreed that the King and he should meet at Calais, and that the Duke should acknowledge Henry for the true King of France, and do him Liege-Homage. This Interview was fixed to the Beginning of October.

*Treaty between Sigismund and Henry.
ibid.
p. 377.*

Mean while, the Emperor Sigismund having nothing more to do, departed about the Middle of August. In his Way to Canterbury, he signed a Treaty of perpetual Alliance with Henry, and at the same Time a League against France. He obliged himself to aid the King in the Recovery of the Kingdom of France, and Henry engaged to assist him in constraining King Charles and some other Princes to do him Homage for certain Territories not specified in the Treaty. Apparently this concerned the Kingdom of Arles and the Dauphin, to which the Emperors had some stale Pretensions. By the way, one has a Glimpse in this Treaty, of one of the Motives of Sigismund's Journey to France and England. In all probability, by procuring a Peace between the two Kings, he hoped to get for himself some one of those Countries, to which he laid Claim. Be that as it will, it may be conjectured, that he expected some private Benefit from the Peace. Great Princes are seldom seen to go and spend whole Years out of their Dominions, with the sole View to mediate a Peace in which they have no manner of Concern. Sigismund was of all other the farthest from that Character. I don't know whether before his Journey to England he had contracted a Friendship with Henry; but after his Departure, it appears by several Records that there was between them a strict Correspondence spondence and mutual Confidence, very uncommon among Princes *.

1416.

The Emperor being arrived at Calais, staid there for Henry goes Henry, who could not come till about the end of Sep- to Calais.
tember. Mean while, the Court of France, alarmed at France the Report of the Duke of Burgundy's being to go and con- sends the fer with Henry at Calais, and wanting to know what the Archbishop issue would be, sent thither the Archbishop of Rheims, of Rheims. with some other Ambassadors. The Prettext was to treat ibid.
about a Peace with the King; but in all Appearance the p. 384.
chief Aim of this Embassy, was to discover what should pass at the Interview. Henry was not sorry that the Ambassadors of France would be Witness of the Arrivall of the Duke of Burgundy at Calais, and therefore he forthwith dispatched their Safe-Conducts, and presently after their Coming, appointed Commissioners to treat with them.
But he laid his Measures so well, that the French could never dive into the real Motive of his going to Calais, at least with any Certainty. It did not appear that he had any other Design but to confirm the late Treaty between him and the Duke, which had been already published at Lon- don. It is true, that afterwards the Duke's Proceedings made him suspected of being in Friendship with the En- glish; but this was only bare Suspicion. The French Historians speak of this Matter in a very loose manner, and we had properly nothing certain about it, till the Publick Re- tords printed in England discovered the Secret. There we find what follows upon this Subject.

The 1st of October, the King dispatched a Safe-Conduct for the Duke of Burgundy, and eight Hundred Attendants, and sent him the Duke of Gloucester his Brother in Hostage.
Next Day; he appointed Commissioners to receive in his Name, the Oaths of John Duke of Burgundy, and of Phi- lip Earl of Charolois his Son, pursuant to the Articles a-

* He was whilst in England solemnly installed Knight of the Garter, together with the Earl of Holland and Zealand.

1416. greed upon, which were in Form of Preliminaries. The Articles were Word for Word thus :

Articles of Agreement between the King and Duke of Burgundy.
ibid.
p. 394.

“ The King having acquainted the Duke of Burgundy with his just Claim to the Crown of France, and his Adversary’s Refusal to give him Satisfaction hitherto, told him, That by the Help of God and St. George, he was resolved to do himself Justice by Force of Arms. Upon this Declaration, the said Duke perceiving the Justice of the King’s Title, and considering the great Victories the Lord had blessed him with, promises to send him his Letters Patents, containing what follows :

“ That although heretofore, for want of a thorough Knowledge of Things, he had espoused the contrary Party, believing it just now that he is better informed, he promises firmly to adhere to the King of England and his Heirs and Successors, as to those who are and ever will be the true and lawful Kings of France, as much as if they were in actual Possession of the Crown.

“ Though for the present the King has not desired the said Duke’s Homage, yet as the said Duke owns it to be his Due, he will promise that as soon as the King of England shall be in possession of a considerable Part of the Realm of France, he will pay him Leige-Homage, and take the Oath of Allegiance to him, just as every Vassal of the Crown of France ought to do to the King of France his Sovereign.

“ Item, The Duke of Burgundy will promise to endeavour, by all known and unknown ways, to place the King of England in the Throne of France.

“ Item, Whilst the King shall be taken up in pursuing his Rights, the Duke of Burgundy will make War with all his Forces upon the Enemies of the said King in France, namely, A. B. C. D. and upon all their Dominions and Adherents refusing Obedience to the King of England.

“ Item,

“ Item, In all the Alliances and Letters Patents made or “ to be made between the said King and Duke, wherein “ the Duke should except or have excepted the King’s “ Adversary, or the Son of the said Adversary, his In“ tent is not to do any Thing contrary to what he will “ promise by these Presents, which he is to give the King,
 “ but will punctually perform it.

“ That if out of Dissimulation the said Duke excepted
 “ the said Adversary, or the Dauphin his Son, for the sake “ of a greater Good, and for the better accomplishing the “ intended Project, his Will and Meaning is, that all such “ Exceptions are void and of no Effect.

“ And that all may know that this proceeds from his “ pure good Will, he will promise, and swear by his “ Faith and Loyalty, to observe without Fraud or Deceit “ these Presents. He will write all the Articles with his “ own Hand, subscribe them, and set his usual Seal to “ them.

All these Articles were drawn up in Form of Letters Pa- p. 399.
tents, written and subscribed by the Duke of Burgundy’s own Hand, and sealed with his Privy-Seal.

Mezerai in his Abridgment of the History of France says, That the Desire of Rule transported the Duke of Bur- gundy to such a Degree, that he went and conferred with the King of England at Calais, and renewed the Truces for his Dominions only, whereby he tied himself up in some Measure from assisting the King of France. What would that Historian have said, had he known all? It is further to be remarked, that the Earl of Charolois, who was afterwards Duke of Burgundy, entered into the same Engagements as the Duke his Father. After this there is no room left to Question the ill Designs these two Princes had entertained against France their native Country. They chose rather to behold it under the Dominion of Foreigners, than governed by their Enemies.

Before Henry left Calais, he concluded a Truce with Truce with France till the 2d of February: Which done, he returned France.
 to England about the Middle of October, in order to hold p. 397.

1416.

the Parliament which had been called for the 19th of the same Month. During this Session, the Parliament granted a Subsidy towards the carrying on of the War. But the Subsidy was so far short of his present Wants, and so little proportioned to his Projects, that he was forced to pawn his Crown to the Bishop of Winchester his Uncle, for a Hundred Thousand Marks, and part of his Jewels to the City of London for Ten Thousand Pounds Sterling. This is a clear Evidence how many Difficulties he would have met with in the Conquest of France with his own Forces, if the Intestine Troubles of that Kingdom had not paved the Way for him. Nevertheless, in spite of his pressing Necessities, he assigned the Earl of Dorset, who had defended Harfleur, a Pension of a Thousand Pounds, upon his creating him Duke of Exeter *.

Henry resolves to renew the War.

His way of raising the Army.

Henry having bound the Duke of Burgundy by the secret Treaty he had just made with him, thought it time to renew the War. He knew, that he should not only have to deal but with one half of France, but moreover that the Burgundian Party would make a Diversion in his Favour, which could not but procure him great Advantages. In this Mind he made all the Preparations he judged necessary to compass his Ends. Mean while, as the Sum granted him by Parliament was not sufficient for his Purpose, and as the Money came but slowly into the Exchequer, he was quickly in great Want. To remedy this Inconvenience, he made use of the following Means: After he had settled the Pay of each Soldier, Horse and Foot, and of each Officer, according to every one's Rank and Character, he entered into private Contracts with several Lords and Gentlemen, whereby they were obliged to find him a certain Number of Horsemen or Footmen, for such an yearly Sum to be paid quarterly. The first Quarterage was paid in hand; but when the second came to be paid, the King had no Money. To supply the present Occasion, he gave them in pawn all the Jewels he had left, with Letters under the Great Seal, empowering empowering them to sell them, if the Money was not paid within such a Time. The Term allowed was Twelve or Eighteen Months, according as the Creditors were more or less tractable. By this Means he got time for the Payment of his Troops, which was a great Conveniency to him, as he could reimburse his Creditors according as the Money came into the Treasury, without being obliged to pay them all at once. People were so well satisfied of his Honesty, that they made no Scruple to serve him, or lend him Money upon such Securities, which would have been little worth under a Prince of less Probity.

* For Life only. Dugd.

1416.

The Preparations which were carrying on in England, State of the Court of France. very justly alarmed the Court of France, which was scarce in a Condition to make the like. The Truce which the Duke of Burgundy had lately made publicly with Henry, was a plain Sign that there was no Assistance to be expected either from the Duke or his Adherents. The Court was even apprehensive that the Duke had gone farther at the Conference he had held with the Enemy of the Kingdom: At least, he was very much suspected of having some ill Designs. So that the Constable who sat at the Helm had no small Concern upon him: He enjoyed a large Share of Authority; but it was not without Uneasiness. Besides, since the Death of John the Dauphin, he was fain to keep very fair with the new Dauphin, for fear that young Prince should take it in his Head to govern without his Help. To all these Difficulties a fresh one was added, by the War the English were preparing to carry into France. As the Kingdom was in an ill Situation, and as the Enemy was like to make great Progress, he considered before-hand, that all the Blame would be laid at his Door. In this perplexed State, he thought his best way would be to try to put a Stop to the King of England's Arms by an extraordinary Negotiation, which should give that Prince room to believe, that the Court of France would be forced to make Peace, though never so unwillingly. He was well aware, that if he should himself treat about a Peace, it would be lost Labour, because every one was persuaded that it was his Interest Affairs should remain embroiled, to the End he might preserve his Authority. It was therefore very unlikely that the King of England should suffer himself to be drove off by any Proposal which could come from him. For this Reason he thought proper to make use of the Prisoners who were in England, and particularly the Duke of Bourbon. We find in the Collection of Publick Acts, several Safe-Conducts dated at one and the same time, for the Domesticks of the Duke of Bourbon going to and coming from France, under divers Pretences. There is room therefore to presume it was then that the Plot was formed, and that the Duke of Bourbon did nothing in the Business I am going to relate, but by Consent of the Court of France.
the 1416.

Act. Pub.
IX. 427.

This Plot was so finely laid, that if the King had not always been upon his Guard, he would doubtless have been over-reached. But his firm Resolution not to interrupt the Execution of his Designs upon the Score of any Offers that should be short of his Demands, caused him to escape the Snare. The Dukes of Orleans and Bourbon, the Earls of Eu and Vendôme, and some other Prisoners, making as if they thought the Affairs of France in a desperate Condition, gave Henry to understand that they were willing to make a separate Treaty with him for themselves. This was hinted to him, not as a Thing resolved, but as what they might easily be brought to. But the King, fearing that on this Pretence they had a mind to retard his Voyage, gave no great heed to this Overture.

Negotiation between Henry and
the French Prisoners;

Some Time after, these same Princes, who till then had tried to manage Matters so as the Proposals might come from him, seeing they could not have their Aim, broke the Ice themselves. At an Audience which they demanded, they made known their Mind, and entreated him to acquaint them with his Pretensions, adding, they did not question but they should return him a satisfactory Answer without any Prejudice to their Honour. The King, who would not be dallied with, roundly told them, that he had no other Proposal to make, but that they should acknowledge him for King of France, and their lawful Sovereign. The Duke of Orleans exclaimed against this Proposal, and plainly plainly told him, they had no Answer to return to such a Demand. Matters went no farther for this Time. 1416.

But a few Week after the Duke of Bourbon returned to the Charge. He told the King, that since they had the Honour to talk with him, several of the Prisoners had dispatched Agents to France, to inform themselves exactly about his Title to the Kingdom of France, and had received greater Light in that Matter than they had before. He added, for his Part he was fully convinced of the Justice of his Cause. Then he said, he had been told, that notwithstanding his just Claim to the whole Kingdom, he had offered to drop it, on Condition certain Provinces were given up to him, and in his Opinion that Offer ought not to be rejected: That the other Prisoners were of his Mind, and had resolved to do all that lay in their Power to procure him what he desired. That therefore he begged leave to go to France, and declare to King Charles in the Name of all the Prisoners, that as faithful Subjects they could not but advise him to close with this Expedient for Peace, and pray him to accept so reasonable an Offer. In short, the Duke added, that if the Court of France consented to the Offer, Henry might this very Year be put in Possession of the Provinces which should be yielded up. But if on the contrary it was rejected, the Princes would look upon themselves as freed from the Oath they had taken to their King. The Duke engaged for his own Part to put all his fortified Towns in the Hands of certain Persons, who he should be sure would deliver them up when he pleased. He promised to return to England by the Time which should be set him, and own Henry for King of France, and do him Homage as his lawful Sovereign. Moreover, he added, that he would make appear so evidently the Justice of Henry's Right to the Crown of France, that all the World should be satisfied he could not dispense with doing him Homage, without running counter to his Honour. To conclude, he entreated the King to keep the Matter secret till his Return, by reason of the Danger he should run, in case it should come out during his Stay in France.

Particularly the Duke of Bourbon.

Particular Engagement of the Duke of Bourbon.

Henry

1416.

He has leave to go to France.

The Projects comes to nothing.

Act. Pub.
IX. 456.

Henry could not tell what to think of this Matter. He knew very well that it was neither the Duke of Orleans nor the Duke of Bourbon that governed France, and that it was not the Earl of Armagnac's Interest to make a Peace upon these Terms. But at the same Time, the recovering of the Provinces of France lost since the Treaty of Bretigny, without being obliged to renew the War, was a pleasing Prospect. On the other Hand, the Option put to him by the Duke, could not but be advantageous to him. All he had to do, was to take care not to break off the Execution of his Projects upon this Account. Wherefore, having resolved not to suspend his Expedition one single Day, upon any Score whatever, he believed there was no Danger in granting the Duke of Bourbon the Leave he desired. But first, he had one of the Duke's Sons given him in Hostage, with Security for the Sum of Two Hundred Thousand Crowns. These Particulars are in the Collection of the Publick Acts. We find there a Letter written with the King's own Hand to Tiptaft, his Ambassador to the Emperor, wherein he orders him to acquaint Sigismund with the Secret, ask his Opinion upon it, and assure him that the Negotiation shall not retard his Expedition against France one Moment. At the same Time he enjoyns him not to say a word of the Matter to any Man but the Emperor alone, on Pain of his heavy Displeasure. In all probability, his firm Resolution not to be put off by any Proposal, was the Reason this Stratagem was carried no farther. The Duke of Bourbon returned into England: but performed not his other Engagements. It was doubtless Henry's Indignation against the Prisoners for endeavouring to over-reach him, that caused him to order them to be confined in Pontfract Castle, whereas before they were upon their Parole. Though there are no positive Proofs that this Plot was contrived by the Constable, yet it appears by several Circumstances, which taken together amount to a sort of Demonstration. It would be too long to give the Particulars here. But if one should chuse to suppose that the French Prisoners acted sincerely, without the Direction of the Constable, it must be inferred that France was then in a very wretched Condition. King Charles, frequently seized with Fits of Lunacy, was incapable of taking Care of his Affairs. The Duke of Burgundy, first Peer of the Realm, and Head of a powerful Party, had made a secret Alliance with the Enemy of the State. The Princes of the Blood were upon the Point of acknowledging Henry for King of France. In fine, the Kingdom was governed by a young Prince of fourteen Years, and by the Earl of Armagnac, whose violent Temper made him mind nothing but Revenge, and caused him openly to sacrifice the publick Good to his Ambition.

1416.
Wretched Condition of France.

Though the Constable had already done a good deal of Mischief to France, by persecuting the Duke of Burgundy, and forcing him as it were to throw himself into the Arms of the King of England, yet he did not think he had done enough to secure his Quiet. Isabella of Bavaria, Wife of Charles VI, appeared so out of Humour to see herself constrained to be ruled by a Subject, that he could not forbear being apprehensive that she would in the End find Means to strip him of his Authority. This was not impossible. The King being naturally of an easy Temper, it would have been no hard Matter to gain him, in one of his Intervals: Neither was it impracticable to persuade the Dauphin to cast off a troublesome Governour, that he might rule as he pleased without controul. Thus the Constable's Destiny hanging by so weak a Thread, whilst he had such an Enemy at Court, he believed that in order to secure himself, it was absolutely necessary to get her removed. The Queen gave him a sufficient Handle against her by her Behaviour, which was not altogether conformable to the Rules of Decency. The Constable taking this Advantage, inspired the King and Dauphin with such strong Suspicions against her, that he got her sent away to Tours, where she remained as a Prisoner, not knowing who to confide in, to try to free herself out of Captivity. This fatal Policy of the Constable was a fresh Source of Calamities which overwhelmed France. The injured Mother could never forgive her Son the Affront she had received, and unfortunately for the Kingdom it was but too much in her Power to glut her Revenge.

The Constable causes
the Queen to be sent off to Tours,

The Queen
hates the Dauphin morally.

1416.
The Duke of Burgundy takes up Arms.

The violent Proceedings of the Constable, the Death of the two Dauphin's laid upon him, the Banishment of the Queen, and a Thousand other Things, furnished the Duke of Burgundy with a Pretence to make a Diversion in Favour of the King of England. He published a Manifesto against the Constable, wherein he aggravated his Faults and Oppressions with all the Resentment of an injured Enemy. Then he wrote to the King, that as first Peer of France, it was incumbent upon him to endeavour to prevent the utter Ruin of the Kingdom, which was infallibly going to Destruction, unless timely relieved. By the same Reasons, he tried to stir up the Cities of the Kingdom, and win them to his Side. In fine, perceiving that some of the Towns had already declared for him, he approached Paris at the Head of an Army, at the same Time that the King of England was ready to set sail for France. His Aim was to bring the Dauphin and Constable under a Necessity, either of quitting Paris, to go and make Head against the King of England, or suffering the English to act without Opposition, if they had a Mind to save Paris. They thought fit to take this last Course, chusing rather that Part of the Kingdom should fall into the Hands of the English, than to see themselves outed of the Government by their private Enemies.

He approaches Paris,

Henry lands at Tonque.

Henry willing to lay hold of so favourable a Juncture, set sail about the End of July, and landed at Tonque in Normandy. His Army consisted but of twenty-five Thousand five Hundred effective Men, too inconsiderable a Number for the Conquest of France, had he not been sure of meeting little Opposition. Upon his Arrival he besieged the Castle of Tonque, and became Master of it the 9th of August. Then after taking some other small Places, he laid Siege to Caen, which surrendered the 9th of September.

A& Pub.
IX. 479--- 490.

Perplexity of the Court
of France.

The Court of France was then in great Perplexity. The Duke of Burgundy, close at the Gates of Paris, hindered the settling the Affairs of the Kingdom. The French should have had two Armies in the Field, one to oppose the Burgundians, and another to defend Normandy against the English.

Englsh. But they had hardly Troops enough to defend 1416.
Paris, where the King, Dauphin and Constable were shut up. The only Remedy left was to renew the Negotiations with Henry. To that End, they demanded a Conference p. 494, between the Ambassadors of the two Crowns, to consult a- Henry con-bout Means to conclude a Peace. Henry agreed to the Pro- sents to a posal, but without discontinuing the War, being unwilling Conference.
 to lose so favourable an Opportunity. The Court of p. 496.
France having made choice of the Archbishop of Rheims for first Plenipotentiary, he appointed on his Part, the Earl of Warwick and some others, who were to meet together He contiwith the French, at Bernonville, in Normandy. This Con- nues his gress, for what Reason I know not, was put off to the end Conquests. of November. Mean while Henry became Master of Bay- 501, 502.
eux, Argentan, Chateau, de l'Aigle, Alençon, and some other Places.

Whilst the King was continuing his Conquests, the Duke of Burgundy did him him very signal Service, not only by the Diversion he made about Paris, but chiefly by increasing the Troubles in France, in such a manner as never more to be appeased. Queen Isabella, banished to Tours, Isabella had been hitherto an Enemy to the Duke of Burgundy; joins with but the desire of being revenged on the Dauphin and Con- the Duke of stable, made her overlook all Causes of the Disgust she had Burgundy.
 taken at the Duke. As she had no other Course to take, she dispatched trusty Messengers to let him know she was inclined to league with him against their common Enemies.
 The Duke readily closed with the Offer, and privately concerted Measures with her, to free her out of Prison. Which done, he departed suddenly from Corbeil, where he was encamped, taking with him only a small Body of chosen Horsemen. He made such speed, that before his Design who carries could be known, he was at the Abby of Marmontier close her off to by Tours, where he found the Queen, who was come thi- Tours.
 ther under Colour of Devotion. As she had not been suspected of attempting her Escape, he carried her off with ease, and conducted her to Troye in Campaigne. As soon She files as she saw herself in a Place of safety, she assumed the Title hersely Reof 1416.

of Regent, pretending that the King her Husband was held in Captivity by the Dauphin and Earl of Armagnac.

Henry takes several Places.

Whilst these Things were doing, Henry made several Conquests in Normandy, without any one's attempting to oppose him. The Constable chose rather to see the State perish, than resign his Authority, and the Duke of Burgundy backed Henry to the utmost of his Power.

Congress of Bernonville.

A&T. Pub.
IX. 517.

Henry's Demands.

The Conference between the Plenipotentiaries of the two Crowns was held at Bernonville, on the 28th of November. As Henry suspected that the Court of France sought only to make him lose Time, he resolved to make short Work of it. Immediately upon the opening of the Conference, his Ambassadors set forth his Pretensions, giving to understand, that not an Inch would be abated. The Substance of his Offers was, That he would marry the Princess Catharine: That King Charles should enjoy the Crown for his Life, but that after his Death, it should fall to the King of England: That during Charles's Life, Henry should be Regent of France, by Reason of the King's Infirmary. Moreover he demanded such Securities as should render the Performance of all these Articles unquestionable. But as the French Ambassadors were not sufficiently im-

The Conference breaks up.

Falaise taken.

532, 541.

powered to treat upon these Articles, and as it was not Henry's Interest to prolong to no Purpose this Negotiation, the Congress immediately broke up. He was justly apprehensive that the Court of France would have made use of this Occasion to raise a Jealousy in his Allies, and particularly in the Duke of Burgundy. Mean while Henry having stuck close to the Siege of Falaise, took the Town on the 20th of December; but the Castle held out till February.

Truce with Bretagne,
civ. p. 506, 511, 512.

Some Time before the Congress of Bernonville, the Duke of Bretagne came to Henry and made a Truce with him for a Year, and the like in the Name of the Queen of Sicily as Guardian of Lewis her Son, for Anjou and Maine. Thus by degrees Henry greatly weakened France, by depriving her of the Assistance she might have received from her Vassals.

Whilst

Whilst the King was employed in France, Oldcastle, of whom I have spoken elsewhere, was seized and brought to London, to the great Satisfaction of the Clergy, who were extremely incensed against him. They were determined to make a Sacrifice of him, for a Terror to all the rest of the Lollards. Notwithstanding his Birth and Merit, he was sentenced to be hung up by the Middle with a Chain and burnt alive. By the Way, his being burnt is a clear Evidence that he was condemned for Herefy, rather than for conspiring against the King. Be that as it will, his Sentence was executed amidst the Curses and Imprecations of the Priests and Monks, who even laboured to prevent the People from praying for him. Thus died Sir John Oldcastle Baron of Cobham, with a wonderful Resolution, perfectly corresponding with the Firmness he had all along showed in maintaining the Doctrine of Wickliff which he professed. He was the first Nobleman that suffered for the sake of Religion. After the Execution, the Parliament enacted fresh Statutes, in order to the utter Extirpation of the Lollards, the Clergy never ceasing to require their Blood with all the eagerness imaginable.

*Oldcastle
burnt alive.*

Some Historians say, that in this very Year Queen Blanch of Navarre, Widow of Henry IV, and Mother-in-law of the present King, was accused of conspiring with her Confessor against the King. Some add, that she was condemned to a Ten-Years Imprisonment, and that her Confessor was killed by the Chaplain of the Tower, with whom he had entered into a Dispute upon that Head. This is all that can be said about this Matter, of which Historians speak very confusedly.

*The Queen Dowager is accused of Conspiracies against the King.
Speed.
Stow.*

As to the Scotch Invasion which some place in this Year, and which as they assure us, was repulsed by the Duke of Bedford, with an Army of a Hundred Thousand Men, I dare venture to affirm is all a Mistake, since we find not the least Footsteps of it, either in the Publick Records, or in the Histories of Scotland. All we meet with relating to the Scots, is, that they threatened to attack England about the Middle of the Year 1415, about the Time of the King's first Expedition into France.

Presumed Invasion of the Scots refused.

The 1418.

Henry takes several Places in Normandy.
Act. Pub.
IX. 545--- 618.

Cherbourg holds out 3 Months.

Martin V. tries to unite the two Factions in France.

May 17.
Agreement between the two Parties,

The Posture of Affairs in France made Henry's Way to Conquest smooth and easy. Accordingly he did not fail to make the best of it. The Campaign which he had began in August, lasted all the Winter, without any Interruption, so that his Troops had no Time to rest. The Castle of Falaise having surrendered on the 20th of February, Henry divided his Army into several Bodies, of which he gave the Command to the Dukes of Clarence and Gloucester his Brothers, to the Duke of Exeter and Earl of Salisbury, with Orders to go and attack several Places at once, being resolved not to let slip so fair an Opportunity. In the Months of March and April, he became Master of St. Lo, Carentan, St. Sauveur le Vicomte, and many other Places in Normandy; so that of all the strong Towns, he only wanted Cherbourg and Roan to complete the Conquest of that Province. Evreux surrendered in May, and presently after he went and laid Siege to Cherbourg, which cost him three Months.

During the Siege, the Court of France underwent a new Revolution, disadvantageous to Henry, though at first it seemed to afford him a good Prospect. The Council of Constance, which had been opened ever since the Year 1414, having deposed the three Popes * who contended for the Papacy, had elected on the 10th of November 1417 Cardinal Colonna, who assumed the Name of Martin V. The new Pope upon his mounting the Papal Throne, sent two Legates into France, to try to appease the Troubles and unite the two Factions. The Sollicitations of these Legates were so powerful, that the two Parties sent their Deputies to Montereau-Faut-Yonne, where it was agreed, that the Dauphin and Duke of Burgundy should jointly govern the Kingdom during the King's Infirmary. If this Agreement had taken Place, and the two Parties been reconciled in good earnest, in all likelihood Henry's Affairs would have received a notable Prejudice. But the Constable and the Chancellor his his Creature, could never bear to see the Duke of Burgundy in the Administration again. So that preferring their own private Interests to the Good of the Publick, they managed it so, that the Agreement remained ineffectual.

* John XXIII at Rome, Gregory XII at Rimini, and Benedict XIII at Avignon. See the History of this Council at large, at the End of Vol. VI.

1418. rendered of no Effect by the Constable.

This Proceeding drew the Hatred of the Publick on the Constable, and increased the Burgundian Faction in Paris, which from thenceforth became much more powerful. At length, May the 18th at Night, they found Means to introduce into Paris, Lisle-Adam Governor of Pontoise, and a zealous Stickler for the Duke of Burgundy. He got in with no more than eight-hundred Horse; but upon his coming, the Burgundians being under Arms, made a terrible Slaughter of the Armagnac's. Tanneguy de Châtel, Governor of the Bastille, not being able to remedy the Disorder, ran in all haste to the Louvre, and carried off the Dauphin with only his Shirt on, in order to screen him from Danger in his Fortress. Next Morning, the Dauphin fled to Melun, not thinking himself safe in the Bastille; but the King was left in the Hands of the Burgundians. The same Day the Constable, being got into a Malon's House, was discovered and thrown into Prison.

The Burgundians become Masters of Paris, and murder the Armagnacs.

The Dauphin is saved.

and the Constable taken.

But this was only a Prelude to a much greater Commotion which happened in the same Place some Days after. Upon News of what had passed, the Exiles being returned to Paris from all Quarters, the Massacre was renewed; June the 12th. The Constable was hauled out of Prison, murdered, and shamefully dragged along the Streets. The Chancellor, several Bishops, and other Persons to the Number of above two Thousand, underwent the same barbarous Treatment. The Massacre being pretty well over, the Queen and Duke of Burgundy came to Paris, and entered the City in Triumph on the 14th of July. The Plague which broke out afterwards at Paris, and which in three Months Space, swept away above Forty Thousand Persons, added fresh Calamities to those I have just mentioned. Mean while the Queen and Duke having the King in their Power, issued in his Name what Orders they judged most conducive of their own Interests. On the other Hand, the Dauphin having taken the Title of Regent, threatened all that Fresh Massacre at Paris.

The Queen and Duke of Burgundy enter Paris, and govern in the King's Name.

The Dauphin styles himself Regent.

1418. that should pay Obedience to the Duke of Burgundy. Thus which Side soever the French espoused, they were sure of being called Rebels by one or other of the two Factions. Even standing Neuter was accounted a Crime.

Agreement
between the two Factions;

Broke off by the Dauphin.

Mean while, notwithstanding the Animosity of the two Parties, the Troubles seemed for some Time likely to end. As there had not been as yet any Cause of personal Enmity between the Dauphin and Duke of Burgundy, the Duke of Bretagne had managed Matters so, that these two Princes had each for his Part consented to an Accommodation. Every Thing was agreed; but they who were about the Dauphin, perswaded him not to sign; the which was attended with fatal Consequences. Thus the Dissention which prevailed between the two Factions, caused each of them to have two Enemies to deal with, the opposite Party on one Side, and the English on the other. But Henry was very far from looking upon both Parties with the same Eye. He was sworn Enemy of the Armagnac's, and but a feigned one of the Burgundians.

Truce in Guienne between Henry and the Gascon-Rebels.

July 17
Act. Pub.
IX. 602.

Henry had already begun to reap some Benefit from the late Revolution in the Court of France. The new Earl of Armagnac, the Lord d' Albret, and the other Gascon Lords of the same Party, who were waging in Guienne fierce War with the English, thought it their best Way to conclude a Truce with him, which would rid him of a troublesome Diversion. These Lords considering that since the Death of the Constable the Government of France was in the Hands of the Duke of Burgundy, believed it repugnant to their Interest to continue a War, of which their Enemy would reap all the Advantage. By this Truce, instead of being obliged to send Supplies to Guienne, Henry drew from thence some Troops, with which he reinforced his Army in Normandy.

The taking of Cher-burg.
p. 618.

Cherburg having at length capitulated, after a three Months Siege, France had nothing left in Normandy but Roan, the Loss whereof would cut off all Hopes of recovering that Province. And therefore, without delay, Henry went and laid Siege to that City about the latter End of August, or beginning of September. Mezerai says the Siege

Siege began in June, which is a Mistake. Be that as it will, it was very remarkable, for the vigorous Defense of the Besieged, who held out five Months, and endured the greatest Hardships before they capitulated. They forthwith applied to the Duke of Burgundy for Succours; but it was to no Purpose. France in changing Governor, had not acquired new Forces. Besides, the Duke of Burgundy, treading in the Steps of the Earl of Armagnac, was more careful how to disappoint the Practices of his Enemies, than oppose the Progress of the King of England. He put however the Pope's Legates upon trying, whether upon a Negotiation he could interrupt the Siege of Roan. This Method not succeeding, he drew together all the Forces he had, and made as if he intended to give the English Battle. He even carried the King as far as Beauvais; but all this ended in nothing. Perhaps he did not much care to obstruct the King of England's Progress. It is uncertain, whether after his being at the Head of the Government, he had the same Thoughts of that Monarch, as he had when banished from Court. It may at least be affirmed, that he had not the same Reason to prosper his Arms. He could not however dispense with keeping fair with a Prince who had in his Hand a Writing capable of ruining him in the Favour of all the French, of what Party soever. For this Reason, since the Revolution in the Court of France, his Behaviour was all along doubtful. He had resolved it seems to do neither Good nor Hurt to the King of England, till such Time as the Event should help to determine him.

The Duke of Burgundy not relieving the Besieged, they applied to the Dauphin, who was no longer in a Condition to raise the Siege by Force of Arms. The way of Negotiation seemed to him more proper to produce that Effect. It is hard to know for certain whether he really intended to make an Alliance with Henry, as he declared he had a Mind to do, or whether he designed only to amuse him. Be that as it will, he sent him Word, that he wanted to treat with him about three Articles. First, about the Means of procuring a Peace for France. Secondly, about 1418.

Siege of Roan.

p. 619.

Several Attempts to save that Place.The Dauphin offers to make an Alliance with Henry

1418.
Act. Pub.
IX. 626.

p. 628.

The King's Instructions to his Ambassadors.

the Marriage already intended. Lastly, about an Alliance between them two, against the Duke of Burgundy. Henry rejected not these Proposals. Perhaps he did not much rely on the Duke of Burgundy, or else he had a mind to raise the Jealousy of the Court of France, in order to procure more advantageous Offers than had yet been made him. He appointed for his Ambassadors at the Congress demanded by the Dauphin, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Earls of Warwick and Salisbury, Philip Morgan, and some others. Their Instructions dated at the Camp before Roan, October the 26th, were in Substance as follows :

I. That they should use their utmost Endeavours to get the Dauphin's Ambassadors to declare all they had Orders to offer, and absolutely to reject all Proposals tending only to the yielding up what he was already possessed of.

II. Granting that the French should offer at length to put all things upon the Foot of the Treaty of Bretigny, yet he would have them start Difficulties about the doing it, seeing the Dauphin was not authorized for that Purpose.

III. He judged, that thereby they might be brought to demand a longer Truce, in which case he ordered that they should be asked what they were willing to give up upon that Consideration.

IV. He expressly forbid his Ambassadors to treat of an Alliance with the Dauphin till the Peace or Truce was settled. He left them however at liberty to conclude either : but ordered notice to be sent him when Matters should be upon the Point of Conclusion, in case Things were carried so far.

V. As to the Alliance with the Dauphin he said, that in all appearance that Prince's Aim was to get him to assist him against the Duke of Burgundy. If so, he forbade them to agree upon an inconsiderable Aid ; but commanded them to tender Forces sufficient to restore the Kingdom of France to a State of Tranquillity.

VI. But at the same Time, he expected that in Consideration of these Forces, the Earldoms of Artois, Bulleign and Flanders, should be yielded up to him. But if his

Am-

Ambassadors could not obtain all this, he gave them leave to confine their Demands to the Earldom of Flanders only, provided the Dauphin would assist him in the Conquest of it. He offered on his Part to give up to the Dauphin whatever should be conquered elsewhere upon the Duke of Burgundy. 1418.

It is easy to see by these Instructions that the King did not believe this Congress would end in a Peace: nay, that he did not so much as design to conclude with the Dauphin, who was not empowered to yield up to the King what had been taken from his Predecessors since the Treaty of Bretigny. There is room then to presume, that his sole Aim was to stir up the Jealousy of the Duke of Burgundy, who being master of the King's Person, was alone able to make a solid Peace. This appears moreover by the King's Writing the very Day he signed these Instructions to the Duke of Burgundy, that if the Negotiation for a Peace was renewed, he would do what in him lay to bring Matters to a good Issue. Upon this Letter, Charles sent him back word, that he had nominated the Bishops of Arras and Beauvais, the first President of Morvilliers, and some others, for his Plenipotentiaries. Thus Henry was in hopes that by treating with the two Parties at once, he should raise such Jealousy in both, that from thence would result a happy Conclusion to his Affairs. The King's View in treating with the Dauphin.

Act. Pub.
IX. 631.

The Congress between the Ambassadors of the King and Dauphin was held at Alençon, the 26th of November. The English, pursuant to their Instructions, absolutely refused to treat about the Alliance, before the Terms of the Peace were agreed upon. At length, after having evaded all the capricious Proposals made them by the French, they obliged them to come to their last Offers; namely, the Towns and Provinces specified in the Treaty of Bretigny, on Condition of doing Homage for them to the Crown of France. But the English rejected these Offers, unless the Sovereignty of the Provinces was added, according to the Tenor of the Treaty of Bretigny. They demanded moreover Normandy: raised Difficulties about the Dauphin's Congress of Alençon.

P. 632.

1418. not being able to perform these Conditions, and wanted to know in what manner he intended to accomplish them, supposing their Master should be satisfied with them. The French made answer, that it was needless to talk of the manner of Performance, since the Offers themselves did not please. Whereupon they broke up the Conference.

Another between the Ambassadors of the two Kings of no Effect.

Ibid.
655—659.

Hardly was this Congress over, before another was held at Pont de l'Arche, between the Plenipotentiaries of the two Kings, or rather the Ambassadors of the two Crowns met with design to confer together in the Presence of the Pope's Legates. But just as they were about to begin, King Charles's Ambassadors insisted that the Records of the Conference should be written in French, to which the English refused to agree. In fine, at the Instance of the Legates, who bestirred themselves mightily in the Business, Henry was willing to agree there should be two Protocols, one in French and another in Latin, of which the last only should be accounted authentick. But the French rejecting this Expedient, the Conference about the Peace was not so much as opened. Apparently the Duke of Burgundy did not intend seriously to enter into Negotiation. He was still undetermined what Course he should take, or rather he was then hatching a Design which we shall see come to light the next Year.

1419.
The Dauphin wants to renew the Treaty.
A&C. Pub.
IX. 661,
672.

This Conference however alarmed the Dauphin, who, no doubt, was ignorant of what passed. He was apprehensive the Duke of Burgundy would be beforehand with him, being very sensible that in case a Peace was made between the two Kings, it could not but tend to his Prejudice. In this Belief he sent to Henry, intreating him to appoint the Place where the Negotiation begun at Alençon might be renewed. Henry readily consented to his Request, not being able to wish for any thing more to his Advantage, than the mutual Jealousy of the two Factions. It was agreed therefore, that the Ambassadors should meet again at Louviers in the Beginning of February.

The taking of Roan.
Ibid.
P. 664.

During all these Negotiations, Henry had not discontinued one Moment the Siege of Roan, though the Sharpness of the Season made his Army suffer very much. But the Besieged Belieged underwent no less Hardships. Reduced to eat the Flesh of Horses, and all kinds of Animals; and even this sort of Food failing them, they could hold out no longer. Wherefore, seeing there was no help, they capitulated on the 13th of January, to surrender on the 19th, in case they were not relieved by that Time. Henry maintained them in all their Privileges for the Sum of Three-hundred Thousand Crowns. By the Surrender of Roan, all Normandy, a few Castles excepted, fell again under the Dominion of the Kings of England, Two-hundred and Fifteen Years after it was taken from them by Philip Augustus, in the Reign of John Lack-land. After the taking of Roan, Henry sent Part of his Army to Picardy, under the Command of the Duke of Exeter, who became Master of Dieppe and Montreuil.

1419.

February, 674—682.

Affairs were then at a Crisis, which could not fail of producing some great Change. As the Duke of Burgundy had not sought the Alliance of the King of England, but purely in order to get the better of the Dauphin and Earl of Ar- magnac, he stood no longer in need of his Aid, seeing he was become Master of Paris, and the King's Person. On the contrary, the Station he was in could not but make him wish that Henry might not grow too powerful in France, and consequently it was his Interest to oppose the Progress of the English Arms. But on the other hand, he had in the Dauphin a sworn Enemy, against whom it was necessary chiefly to secure himself. Besides, the natural Right that Prince had to govern the Kingdom during the Infirmary of the King his Father; he was moreover at the Head of a strong Party: Then it was not impossible, that either by the King's Death, or some other way, he might regain the Ground he had lost. In which Case the Duke would sooner have had Henry Master of all France, than see the Dauphin uppermost. Mean while, what Turn soever Affairs should take, he plainly perceived, it would not be in his Power to preserve his Authority, though Henry should succeed in his Designs. And indeed, it was not likely that Henry would trust him with the Government, when once he had got Possession. Thus standing as

The Duke of Burgundy takes new Measures.

1419.

He resolves to be Friends with the Dauphin.

as it were between two Precipices, he remained some Time unresolved, not knowing what Course to take. In all probability it was this that prevented him from attempting more vigorously the Relief of Roan. He durst not break with the King of England, for fear he should want his Assistance against the Dauphin. After he had continued some Time in this State of Perplexity, he determined at length to do all that lay in his Power to be reconciled with his Enemy, that he might safely break with the King of England. This Course seemed to him both advantagious and honourable. By a hearty Reconciliation with the Dauphin, he might hope to have some lasting Share in the Government of the Kingdom, and to hold the second Rank: Besides, France being his native Country, he could not openly forsake her Interests without rendring himself odious to all honest Frenchmen. If he had privately made such a Step already, it was not without Remorse: The sole Thirst of Revenge had hurried him away. The Execution however of the Design he had formed, was not without its Difficulties. The Dauphin had conceived against him an inveterate Hatred, which was continually fomented by the Friends and Adherents of the late Duke of Orleans, who were always about him, and carefully watching all Opportunities to revenge the Death of that Prince. In spite of these Obstacles, the Duke of Burgundy became more and more confirmed in his Resolution, not seeing any other way to save himself and the Kingdom. He undertook therefore to bring about this Reconciliation by all sorts of Means, even to the forcing the Dauphin to it, from the Fear of seeing France without it entirely lost. In fine, if it should happen that the Dauphin's Hatred and Obstinacy should render their being made Friends impracticable, he was determined to take the desperate Course of helping Henry to become Master of France.

*Conference of Louviers.
Act. Pub.
IX. 686,
701, 703.*

At the same Time that the Duke of Burgundy came to his last Resolution, the Conference between the Ambassadors of Henry and the Dauphin was held at Louviers. The same Difficulties which arise at the Congress of Alençon, rendered this fruitless. It was only agreed, that the King and

and Dauphin should confer together in Person. But this Interview, which was twice put off, took not place, because the Dauphin entered into other Measures. Mean while, to keep alive the Jealousy of the Duke of Burgundy, Henry granted the Dauphin a Truce, from the 1st of February till Easter, for all the Country lying between the Loire and Seine, Normandy excepted.

1419.

Truce with the Dauphin.
P. 692.

Pursuant to the Scheme the Duke of Burgundy had laid, he sent and sued for the Dauphin's Friendship, offering on his Part to do all that lay in his Power to deserve and cultivate it. He let him know at the same Time, that it would be proper they should hold a Conference together, as well mutually to confirm their Reconciliation, as to concert Measures for the Welfare of the Kingdom. But the Dauphin rejected this Proposal with great Disdain. He was too much afraid of sharing the Authority with the Queen his Mother, and the Duke of Burgundy, or rather of seeing himself subject to them. The sole Command of the Provinces which received him for Regent, seemed to him preferable to the Advantage they would have made him hope for, from a Reconciliation which could not be made without leaving the Queen his Mother, and the Duke a Share in the Administration. Thus the Duke of Burgundy saw himself reduced to a Necessity of labouring heartily to make Peace with England, in case the Dauphin persisted in his Obstinacy. The Congress at Lowiers having alarmed him, he was afraid of being prevented, and by that Means of not being strong enough to make Head against the King of England and the Dauphin, if they should happen to join in a League against him. He resolved therefore, in order to rid himself of this Fear, to unravel Matters which way soever it could be done. With this View he sent Henry word, that King Charles was inclined to a Peace; and to make the Way to it the easier, he proposed an Interview, where the two Kings, assisted by their respective Councils, might settle the Terms, and conclude the intended Marriage. Henry readily closed with the Proposal. He even granted a Truce for three Months, that during the Inter-

The Dauphin refuses to be reconciled with the Duke of Burgundy.

The Duke proposes a Peace to Henry.
Act. Pub.
IX. 696,
709, 724.

val

1419. val they might agree upon the Time, Place, and Manner of the Interview.

Fruitless Attempts to reconcile the Dauphin with the Duke of Burgundy.

All France was justly alarmed at this Resolution. People easily perceived that the Peace and Marriage could not be made at such a Juncture, without the Kingdom's being yielded up to the King of England. Matters standing thus, some Lords who had the Welfare and Interest of their Country at heart, left no Stone unturned to procure a Peace, or at least a Truce between the Dauphin and Duke of Burgundy. The Dauphin would have agreed to a Truce for three Years, but the Duke would have it only for two Months. His Aim was to strike up a Peace with England, if by that Time Matters could not be accommodated with the Dauphin. The Pains that were taken to bring them to so necessary an Union proving fruitless, the Project of the Interview between the two Kings was at length brought about, after it had been put off at several times, till the 30th of May. It was agreed, that it should be near Meulan, in a Field pitched upon for that Purpose, where a magnificent Pavilion was ordered to be erected. As King Charles's Infirmary hindered him from being present in Person, it was agreed, that his Queen and the Duke of Burgundy should act as his Proxies, and that the Duke of Bretagne should be there. Mean time, to avoid the Heats and Contests which might arise in debating Matters, Commissioners were appointed on both Sides to settle the Particulars. Henry was pleased to give the Dukes of Clarence and Glocester the Honour of being Heads of this Commission. The Court of France being at Pontoise, Henry came to Mante, that he might be near the Place of Conference. From these two Towns it was that the two Courts repaired every Day to the Place appointed. The first Day the Queen of France brought along with her the Princess Catharine her Daughter, of whose Charms Henry became enamoured. The Effect of this first Sight being very visible, the Queen believed she should inflame the Desires of that Prince, by not letting her Daughter appear again. Henry soon perceived her Design. He found they had a Mind to make use of the Princess for 1419.

for a Decoy to ensnare him. But, to cut off the Queen's hopes, he told the Duke of Burgundy, that they might depend upon it, he would never quit his Arms, till he had the King and the Princess his Daughter in his Power, and had driven him out of the Kingdom in Case he was against it. At any other Juncture, the Duke who was no less fiery than the King, would doubtless have returned him a smart Answer. But not to exasperate too much the Prince, of whom he might soon stand in need, he was content with saying, that he did not question but he should give him Cause to be weary of the War.

The Conference of Mentant ran upon three Articles, which Henry insisted upon as Preliminaries to the Peace and Marriage.

I. That he should be put in Possession of whatever had Henry's Demands. been given up to Edward III by the Treaty of Bretigny. Act. Pub.

II. That moreover all Normandy should be yielded to him. IX. 762.

III. That he should hold in full Sovereignty, and without any Dependence, whatever should be given up by the ensuing Treaty.

As Henry would not recede from these Articles, the Duke of Burgundy plainly saw, that if he directly opposed them, it would occasion the breaking up of the Conference, which it was his Interest to continue as the only way left to bring the Dauphin to a Reconciliation. And therefore without disputing, or granting the King's Pretensions, he contented himself with delivering to the King the Counter-Demands of France. They were drawn up so as to be liable to great Objections, which he might either improve or drop, according as he saw what Resolution the Dauphin would come to. In a Word, the Duke of Burgundy's Aim was to give the Dauphin a little more Time before he concluded any Thing with the King of England. These were the Demands of France, with the King's Answers annexed.

1419.
Demands of France.
ibid.
 p. 763.

I. That the King of England renounce the Crown of France.

The King consents to it, provided this Clause be added, [except what is yielded to him by the present Treaty.]

II. That he quit Claim to Touraine, Anjou, Maine, and the Sovereignty of Bretagne.

The King is not pleased with this Article.

The Reason was in all likelihood, because of the Sovereignty of Bretagne, which he claimed as Duke of Normandy.

III. The King of England shall swear, that neither he nor his Successors shall receive at any Time hereafter, upon any Account whatever, the Conveyance of the Crown of France from any Person who hath, or pretends to have a Right to it.

The King agrees to this, provided his Adversary will swear likewise the same Thing, &c.

IV. The King of England shall cause the Renunciations, Promises, and Engagements to be recorded in the manner the King of France and his Council shall think properest.

The King likes not this Article.

IV. As there are still in Normandy several Places not conquered by the King of England, which however are to be given up by the Treaty, he shall desist upon that Score from all his other Conquests made elsewhere.

Every one shall be restored to the Possession of his Estate in what Places soever it lies. There shall be an Alliance concluded between the two Kings.

The King approves of this, on Condition the Scots and the Rebels shall not be included in the Alliance.

VII. The King of England shall refund the six Hundred Thousand Crowns paid to Richard II in Part of the eight Hundred Thousand Crowns he was to have with his Queen Isabella. Moreover four Hundred Thousand Crowns for that Princess's Jewels detained in England.

The King is willing that this Article be allowed out of the Arrears due for King John's Ransom. However he is surprized at the Demand of four Hundred Thousand Crowns for Queen Queen Isabella's Jewels, when they were not worth a Quarter of that Sum. 1419.

It is easy to perceive by the Nature of these Demands, The Duke of Burgundy's Designs. that the Objections were not considerable enough to hinder the Conclusion of a Peace, if both the Parties had been alike willing. But on the other Hand they were sufficient to keep the Treaty depending, as long as the Court of France should please. In the State the Duke of Burgundy was in, he did not insist upon the Articles which the King was averse to, any further than was necessary for his Design. He was well pleased to let the King believe that the Peace was just going to be concluded, as indeed it would have been, had the Dauphin persisted in his Obstinacy. Henry so little questioned it, that on the 5th of July, that is, about a Month after the opening of the Congress, he gave full Power to the Archbishop of Canterbury to go to Paris and conclude the Peace in his Name with King Charles.

But whilst Henry was pleasing himself with this Prospect, Endeavours were using on the other Side to break all his Measures. As he had made use of Negotiations now with the Dauphin, then with the Duke of Burgundy, in order to stir up the Jealousy of both, and attain his Ends, he was himself over-reached in his own Way. The Congress of Meulant wherein the Duke of Burgundy's chief Aim had been to frighten the Dauphin, produced the Effect he expected. The young Prince alarmed at seeing upon the Point of Conclusion a Peace so disadvantageous to France and himself, did not think proper obstinately to refuse any longer to be reconciled with the Duke of Burgundy, since their Reconciliation was the only Means to prevent so great a Mischief. Wherefore after several private Conferences between some trusty Friends of the two Princes, a Reconciliation, so earnestly wished for by all honest Frenchmen, was at length brought about. On the 11th of July they met about three Miles from Meulant in the Road to Paris, and embraced one another. After that they signed a Treaty, A&T. Pub. IX. 776. whereby they mutually promised to love one another like Brothers, 1419. Brothers, and jointly to withstand the damnable Enterprize of the English, the old Enemies of the Kingdom.

The Duke of Burgundy breaks off the Conference of Meulant.
p. 786.

This Step being made, the Duke of Burgundy took new Measures. As he no longer desired the Conclusion of the Peace, he strenuously insisted in the Conferences which were still kept on at Meulant upon the Demands of France. But for fear Henry should desist from the Objections he had made to them, he added some fresh Articles. In explaining the third Demand of France, he clogged it with so many Conditions, that in all possible Cases for the future, neither Henry nor his Successors Kings of England could ever have any Claim or Share in it. But Henry, who was very willing to quit his Pretensions to the Kingdom of France, as descended from Edward III., thought it very unreasonable that he should be obliged to extend his Renunciation for himself and Successors, to all Cases that might happen for the Time to come, and which it was not possible to foresee. He complained moreover that the Duke of Burgundy demanded some Things which he could not grant without sinning against God, and breaking his Oaths. I do not know what this was. In fine, to render the Conclusion of the Peace impracticable, the Duke fell upon the King's Demands, against which he took Care not to alledge any Thing before he was Friends with the Dauphin. He affirmed that in general, they were extravagant, obscure, ambiguous, and unreasonable, without mentioning any Instances. At the same Time he pretended that Henry should accept the Offers of France, absolutely and simply, without any manner of Explanation. For fear however of being taken at his Word, he refused to consent that the Articles already agreed upon, should be committed to Writing.

Hitherto Henry had imagined, upon what Grounds I know not, that the Duke of Burgundy's Reconciliation with the Dauphin, would be no Obstacle to the Peace. We find in the Collection of Publick Acts, that on the 18th of July, that is, seven Days after their Interview, Henry empowered the Archbishop of Canterbury to conclude his Marriage with the Princess Catharine. One would think he knew nothing yet of what had passed on the 11th between ibid.

774. 775.

tween the Dauphin and Duke of Burgundy, if it did not appear by a Letter in the said Collection, that some of his Courtiers had received Intelligence of it on the 14th. He was so prejudiced on this Occasion, that on the 19th he gave Power to Commissioners to prolong the Truce. But the new Demands of the Duke of Burgundy, or rather his Cavils at the Treaty, broke off the Conferences, and each Party went and prepared for War.

July the 28th, Henry ordered a Detachment, headed by the Duke of Clarence, to storm Pontoise. This Enterprize was attended with the Success he expected, L' Isle Adam the Governor, not dreaming of being attacked, was surprised and fain to fly with Part of the Garrison. As the Court of France had resided in this Town during the Congress of Meulant, and had been gone but a few Days, the English Soldiers found the Place full of the Baggage of the Courtiers. The Booty is said to amount to above two Millions of Crowns.

The taking of Pontoise opened the King a Way to the very Gates of Paris. But however the Posture of Affairs was not changed for the better, since the Union of the two Factions which had divided France. Whilst they were worrying one another, an Army of Twenty-five Thousand Men had been sufficient for the Conquest of Normandy. No Enemy had appeared to offer to disturb him in his Sieges. What is more, one of the Factions had all along countenanced him, either openly or underhand. But since their Reconciliation, he could hardly expect, with his own Forces alone, to compass his Ends. He aimed at no less than the Conquest of the whole Kingdom, or at least what England had lost since the Treaty of Bretigny. And yet after a six Years War, and at so favourable a Juncture, he was not Master but of one single Province. He was also sensible, that in England every Body did not applaud his being bent upon continuing so hazardous a War, and that it was openly said, the Conquest of France would be the Ruin of England. But this was not the only Thing that gave him Uneasiness. He had just received a Letter from Bayonne, of the 22d of July, informing him, that a powerful Fleet was 1419.

P. 779.

p. 782.

Henry takes Pontoise.

Juven. des Urins Hist. of Charles VI.

A great Booty.

The Posture of Henry's Affairs.

Aet. Pub. IX. 782.

1419.
791, 794.

was equipping in Castile for the Aid of the Dauphin. Shortly after he received another from the Mayor of the same Town, acquainting him, that Arragon had declared for the Dauphin; that the Castilians and Arragonians had already entered Bearn, ravaged the Country about Bayonne, and seemed to have a Design to besiege the Town. The Letter added further, that the Castilian Fleet was ordered to sail for Scotland, to take on Board there a Body of Troops which were to be transported into France, to serve under the Command of the Dauphin. On the other Hand, he could not doubt but the Flemmings, who had refused to serve the Duke of Burgundy against France, would be ready to obey him, when the Business was to assist that Kingdom. Maugre all these Difficulties which had started up on a sudden, he persisted in his first Resolution. He had even the Assurance to offer King Charles, as a sort of Favour, that he would be contented with what he had demanded at Meulant, provided he should be left in Possession of Pontoise, which he had just taken. It is however undeniable, that he should have been at a great Non-plus. When he took the War in Hand, he depended upon the Dissentions of the French. And to these Dissentions was he indebted for his going on so smoothly hitherto. Meanwhile he saw himself obliged to undertake with the help of an inconsiderable Army, the Conquest of a Kingdom, of which he possessed as yet but a small Part. But the good Fortune, or rather the Animosity of the Dauphin against the Duke of Burgundy, happily brought him off at this Pinch.

The Dau- phin causes
the Duke of Burgundy to be offended.

In the Interview between the Dauphin and Duke of Burgundy, they had agreed to meet again upon the Bridge of Montereau-Faut-Tonné, on the 28th of August, in order to consult about the manner of carrying on the War against the English. The Duke was extremely loath to go to the Place appointed. One would think he had some Misgiving of what was to happen to him. However, as too great a Distrust might have broke his Measures, and rendred all he had done of no Effect, he resolved to stand to his Engagement. Not to enter into the Particulars related by all the French Historians, I shall content my self with saying, that the Dau- phin

this caused the Duke to be assassinated upon the very Bridge they had pitched upon for their Conference. I say, the Dauphin, how much Pains soever some Historians have taken to clear him; the Deed was done before his Eyes, and at his Feet, and he kept for all that the Murderers in his Service, who were the chief Officers of his Household. There would be need of no other Proof of his Guilt, supposing there had not been Historians honest enough freely to own it.

This Accident changed on a sudden the Face of Affairs. In all likelihood the Duke of Burgundy at the Time of his Death was well-affected to France. But Philip his Son and Successor, suffering himself to be hurried away with the Desire of revenging the Death of his Father, did not stick to ruin the Kingdom in order to gratify his Passion. The speediest and most effectual Means to attain his Ends, was to make a League with the King of England and Queen Isabella, mortal Enemy of the Dauphin her Son. Accordingly, all the rest of the Year was spent in secret Negotiations, which tended in the long Run to the giving up the Kingdom into the Hands of the English. Mean while, the new Duke of Burgundy held the same Place the Duke his Father had been in: That is to say, being Master of the King's Person, he was looked upon as Regent, by those who were not in Obedience to the Dauphin.

The Face of Affairs changed.

Act. Pub. IX. 805, 806.

Since the taking of Pontoise, the Court of France was removed by reason of the continual Inroads of the English up to the very Gates of Paris. Mean while the Parisians saw themselves in manifest Danger. The Duke of Burgundy's Thoughts being wholly engrossed by Revenge, he took no care for the Defence of Paris. Whereupon, the Inhabitants justly alarmed at so dangerous a Neighbourhood, thought it their wisest Course to try to prevent their Ruin, by coming to an Agreement with Henry. There were several Negotiations which ended in a separate Truce for Paris, from the 20th of November to the 25th. This was but small comfort to the Parisians: but as the Treaty between the King and Duke of Burgundy was upon the Point

The Parisians apply to Henry. Ibid. 747, 810.

They obtain a short Truce. P. 815.

of 1419. of Conclusion, they had no need of a longer Truce, since they were included in the Treaty. Besides, Henry did not intend to deprive himself of the Advantage which the Neighbourhood of Pontoise gave him upon the Parisians, in case the Treaty he was negotiating with the Duke of Burgundy should come to be violated by some unexpected Accident. Since the Death of the Duke of Burgundy, nothing but Envoys and Couriers were continually going backwards and forwards between the King and Duke. Henry was willing to make the same Alliance with him, as he had done with the deceased. But having been over-reached by the Father, he did not care to run the Hazard of being served in the same Manner by the Son: And therefore, before he joined in League with him against the Dauphin, he was resolved to be sure of a Peace with King Charles.

Henry claims the Crown of France.

At the Congress of Meulan, Henry had limited his Pretensions to the Articles of the Treaty of Bretigny, and to Normandy. But although, after the breaking up of the Conferences, he seemed resolved to stand his ground without relaxing in the least. 'Tis to be supposed, if the Murder of the Duke of Burgundy had not unexpectedly happened, he would have fallen very considerably in his Demands. At least, the Posture of Affairs would have left him no room to expect, that he should ever be able to compel France to grant him so great Advantages. After the Death of that Duke, the Scene was changed in his Favour. Wherefore, finding he was earnestly applied to by Queen Isabella, and the new Duke of Burgundy, he did not question but it would be in his Power to impose upon France what Terms he pleased. He forgot therefore the Offers he had made at Meulan, and resumed his former Claim to the Crown of France, with the same Condition that Charles VI. should be King during his Life. These are the Articles which he proposed as a Foundation for a Peace.

Preliminary Articles of the Peace.
Act. Pub.
IX. 816.

I. That he would espouse the Princess Catharine, without any charge to her Relations, or the Kingdom.

II. That

II. That he should not disturb King Charles in the Enjoyment of the Crown, or Possession of the Revenues of the Kingdom, during the said King's Life. That Queen Isabella his Spouse should likewise enjoy, during her Life, the Rights annexed to her Dignity. 1419.

III. That after the Death of King Charles, the Crown of France should fall to the King of England and his Heirs for ever.

IV. That by reason of King Charles's Infirmary, which prevented him from attending to the Government of the State, the King of England should take upon him the Administration of Affairs, as Regent, during the Life of the King his Father-in-law.

V. That the Princes, Nobles, Corporations, Burghers, &c. should take an Oath to the King of England as Regent, and bind themselves by the same Oath to own him for Sovereign after the Death of King Charles.

VI. That for Security of the Performance of these Articles, the King of France should give the King of England his Letters Patents under his Great Seal; That he should cause the like Letters of Approbation to be given him by the Queen his Spouse, by the Duke of Burgundy, by the Peers, &c. in clear and plain Terms, as should be agreed upon by the Parties.

VII. That the King of England should give and cause to be given the like.

Henry's Pretensions being thus settled in these few fundamental Articles, the Duke of Burgundy signed Letters Patents, whereby he approved of these Articles as good, beneficial, reasonable, and tending to the Welfare of France and all Christendom. This done, a general Truce was published from the 24th of December to the 1st of March next. As soon as the Business of the Peace was over, the Plenipotentiaries of the King and Duke of Burgundy signed a private Treaty of Alliance, containing these six Articles: Approved by the Duke of Burgundy. Sept. 15.

1419.

Treaty between Henry and the Duke of Burgundy.
Act. Pub.
IX. 825, 840.

I. That one of the King's Brothers should marry one of the Duke of Burgundy's Daughters.

II. That the King and Duke should love and assist one another like Brothers.

III. That they should jointly endeavour to bring to Punishment the Dauphin, and the rest of the Murderers of the late Duke of Burgundy.

IV. That if the Dauphin or any other of the said Murderers should be taken Prisoners, they should not be released without the Consent of the Duke of Burgundy.

V. That the King of England should cause to be assigned to the Duke and his Dutcheſs, Daughter of King Charles, Lands of the yearly Value of Twenty Thousand Livres, lying as nigh as possible to his Domeſnu in France; and that they should do Homage for them to the Crown. That they should have Letters under the Great Seal to that Purpose, which the King of England should confirm upon his entering upon the Regency.

VI. That if any Person hereafter, under colour of his marrying a Daughter of France, should claim the like Assignment of Lands, the Duke should assist the King to the utmost of his Power to prevent it.

1420.

This Treaty was ratified by the two Princes in the Beginning of January, 1420.

Although the Peace was not yet signed, it was looked upon however as a done Thing, since the Terms were agreed on. Henry was so sure of it, that January the 24th, that is, four Months before the signing of the Treaty, he promised by his Letters Patents to the Parisians, to maintain them in their Privileges when he should come to be King of France.

The Truce prolonged in order to draw up the Treaty.

Mean while, as it was necessary to draw up the Articles agreed upon in the most exact Form, and to avoid all obscure and equivocal Expressions, some Time was spent in doing it. This occasioned the frequent prolonging of the Truce. All that while Henry had Ambassadors at Troye, to draw up the Treaty of Peace jointly with the Duke of Burgundy.

Burgundy. For the greater Precaution, it was first reduced to the Form of Preliminary Articles, to the End every one might examine what was to be added, retrenched or explained. This done, Charles confirmed all the Articles by his Letters Patents, dated April the 9th. It is remarkable, that by the XXI. Henry was to swear, that upon no Occasion whatever, during the Life of King Charles, he should take upon him the Title of King of France. And yet we find in the Collection of Publick Acts, an Order of his dated April 18. for coining a new Sort of Money in Normandy, with an H on one Side, and these Words round it: Sic Nomen Domini Benedictum; and on the other, Henricus Francorum Rex (a).

1420.
Articles preliminary approved by King
Charles.
P. 877.

Henry takes the Title of King of France on a new Coin;
p. 888.

After the Preliminaries were approved of, an Interview between the two Kings was agreed on for the swearing and signing the Treaty. This Interview was to be somewhere near Troye: but afterwards Henry agreed it should be in Troye itself. As King Charles was not fit to appear in publick, the Queen and Duke of Burgundy were empowered to swear the Peace in his Name. Henry being come to Troye, May the 20th, found there the King of France, his Queen, and the Princess Catharine, to whom he made a Present of a Ring of great Value. Next Day the Treaty was signed and sworn with the usual Formalities; and the same Day Henry betrothed the Princess, but the Marriage was not consummated till the 2d of June. The Substance of this famous Treaty was as follows:

P. 894.

Henry comes to Troye, signs the Treaty, and betroths Catharine.
p. 907.

T R E A T Y of T R O Y E.

I. T H E King of England being become Son of the King of France, by his Marriage with the Princess Catharine, shall honour the King and Queen of France as his Father and Mother, &c.

Treaty of Troye.
P. 896.

(a) There are some Pieces still in Being in the Hands of the Curious.

1420.

II. He shall not hinder the King of France during his natural Life, from preserving the Royal Dignity, and receiving the Revenues of the Crown. In like manner, as long as the Queen Isabella shall live, she shall enjoy the Royal Dignity, and the Rents, Revenues, Honours and Prerogatives belonging to the Queens of France.

III. Queen Catharine shall have for her Dowry in England, Forty Thousand Crowns a Year, as the Queens of England used to have.

IV. This Dowry shall be so settled upon her, that she may enter upon it the Day of the King her Husband's Death.

V. If she out-lives the King her Husband, there shall be made over to her in France an yearly Revenue of Twenty Thousand Livres, issuing out of the Lands belonging formerly to Queen Blanch, Wife of Philip.

VI. After the Death of King Charles, the Crown of France, with all its Appurtenances, shall descend to the King of England and his Heirs.

VII. As the King of France is frequently hindered by his Infirmary from attending to the Government of the State, the King of England shall from this Day be Regent of the Kingdom, and govern it according to Justice and Equity, with the Advice of the Princes, Peers, Barons, and Nobles of the said Kingdom.

VIII. The Parliament of Paris shall be maintained in the Jurisdiction they enjoyed over the Places subject to the King.

IX. The King of England shall preserve the Privileges, Rights, Liberties, Immunities and Customs of the Peers, Nobles, Corporations, and of all the King's Subjects in general.

X. Justice shall be administered according to the Laws, Customs and Usages of the Realm.

XI. All the Posts as well civil as military shall be filled with Persons duly qualified, according to the Laws of the Realm.

XII. The King of England shall endeavour to the utmost of his Power, to reduce to the Obedience of the King all the Provinces, Cities, Towns, which have withdrawn their their Allegiance, and joined the Party commonly called, the Dauphin's or Armagnac's. 1420.

XIII. All the Princes, Peers, Barons, Nobles, States, as well Spiritual as Temporal, Cities, Corporations, Burghers, &c. shall swear, 1. Punctually to observe what shall be enjoined by the two Kings and the present Queen. 2. To obey the King of England as Regent. 3. To recognize him after the Death of King Charles for their lawful Sovereign, and to obey none but him. 4. Not to aid or abett any Plot against his Person, and to inform him of all such Plots as shall come to their Knowledge.

XIV. All the Conquests which shall be made hereafter, in the Kingdom of France, Normandy excepted, shall be to the use of the present King. Item, all the Lands and Lordships, which shall be conquered, shall be restored to their Right Owners, being in Obedience to the King, and having sworn to keep the present Treaty.

XV. All the Ecclesiasticks of Normandy, subject to the King of England, and paying Obedience to King Charles, or that are of the Burgundian Party, upon swearing the present Treaty, shall enjoy their Benefices as well in Normandy as elsewhere.

XVI. All the Norman Ecclesiasticks holding Benefices in France, shall be continued in them upon the same Terms.

XVII. The Universities and Colleges, as well in Normandy as in France, shall be preserved in their Rights and Privileges, on the Conditions above specified, saving to the Crown of France its Prerogatives.

XVIII. Upon the King of England's coming to the Crown of France, Normandy and all his other Conquests shall be re-united to the Crown.

XIX. If the King of England has already disposed in Normandy of any Lands, Revenues, or Possessions belonging to any of the Burgundian Party, they shall have an equivalent in France, out of the Lands of the Rebels. And if they receive not this Equivalent before the said King is in Possession of the Crown of France, he promises to give it the Moment he ascends the Throne. But what he has 1420.

has not disposed of, shall be restored to the Owners, as is said in Article XIV.

XX. All publick Acts shall run in King Charles's Name. However as some unforeseen Cases might happen, wherein the King of England should be obliged to dispatch Orders, then he shall be allowed to join his Name as Regent to the present King's.

XXI. The King of England shall forbear, on all Occasions during the Life of King Charles, assuming the Title of King of France.

XXII. In publick Acts, the King of France, speaking of the King of England, shall use this Form, Our dearly beloved Son, Henry King of England, Heir of France.

XXIII. The King of England shall lay no Taxes on the French without just Cause, and for the good of the Publick, according to the Laws and Customs of the Kingdom.

XXIV. When he himself or his Heir shall come to the Crown of France, the two Kingdoms of France and England shall be united for ever, under the Dominion of one and the same Prince. There shall not be a King in each Kingdom; but one and the same King shall be Sovereign of both the Realms, without however subjecting the one to the other; but the Laws and Liberties of each of the two Kingdoms shall be preserved entire.

XXV. Henceforward Friendship and a good Understanding shall be established between France and England, and the two Kingdoms shall assist one another with all their Power.

XXVI. All the Allies of the two Crowns shall have eight Months to get themselves included in the present Peace, if they desire it; saving to the two Crowns, and their Subjects, the proper Remedies any ways belonging to them against the said Allies (a).

XXVII. The Officers and Domesticks of the present King shall be French, or Natives of Places where the French Tongue

(a) Henry probably inserted this obscure Reservation, with regard to Scotland.

Tongue is spoken' (b), and shall be able and reputable Persons. The King his Son and the Duke of Burgundy shall take Care, surely, laudably, and honestly, that the said King have all Things answerable to his State and Dignity.

1420.

XXVIII. He shall keep his Residence in some considerable Place within his own Dominions, and no where else.

XXIX. Upon Consideration of the Crimes committed by Charles, who styles himself Dauphin of Viennois, it is agreed, that no Peace shall be made with him without the unanimous Consent of the two Kings, and Duke of Burgundy.

XXX. For the Security of the Performance of the fore-said Articles, Letters under the Great Seal shall be given the King of England by the King of France. Item, The Queen, the Duke of Burgundy, the Princes of the Blood, Peers, Nobles, Towns, Cities, Corporations, subject to the King, and all in general of whom the King of England shall require it, shall give the like Letters of Approbation.

XXXI. The King of England shall likewise do the same for himself, for the Princes his Brothers, the rest of the Princes of the Blood, and others whom the King of France shall desire it for.

Given at Troye, May the 21st. in the Year of our Lord 1420, and of King Charles the 40th.

The Marriage being consummated June the 2d, the two Courts sat out together next Morning for Sens, which was already invested. This Place having held out but ten or twelve Days, the Army marched to Montereau, where the Duke of Burgundy had been murdered, and took the Town in a short Time. The Duke of Burgundy found there the Body of the Duke his Father, buried in his Doublet after an indecent Manner, and ordered it to be removed to Dijon.

Sens taken.
A^ct. Pub.
IX. 910.
and Montereau.

About the Middle of July the Army went and laid Siege to Melun. which was defended by the Lord Barbazan the Governor Melun besieged,

A^ct. Pub.
X 4.

(b) This was not to exclude the Inhabitants of the Provinces belonging to the King of England, as Normans, &c.

1420. Governor four Months. The King of England kept with his Army on the Side of Gatinols, and the Duke of Burgundy commanded on the Side of La Brie. This Siege became famous by the brave Defense of the Besièged, who repulsed several Assaults, and whom Famine compelled at length to capitulate about the Middle of November. A French Historian says, the Capitulation was not kept, by which the Garrison were to have their Lives without Ransom, except such as had a Hand in the Murder of the Duke of Burgundy, but that instead of being left at Liberty, they were thrown into Prison at Paris, and starved to Death. To be able to judge of the Truth of this Fact, one should see the Articles of Surrender, and be certain whether they that were carried to Paris, were not of the Number of those that were expressly excepted. It is so much the more likely that they were really so, because the same Author says, that the King and Duke of Burgundy had demanded four and twenty Hostages by Name, and that these Hostages were conducted to Paris, with as many more as could be seized. This seems to hint that the Garrison had been suffered to march off, and that none but some private Persons were seized, who might be suspected, as well as the Hostages, of being concerned in the Death of the Duke of Burgundy. Be that as it will, as Henry is not to be excused in case he broke his Word on this Occasion, so likewise I think we are not to be too hasty in giving Credit to a single Historian, who appears in other Respects exceeding partial against Henry, and even refrains not from abusive Language. After the Surrender of Melun, the two Courts set out for Paris, where the two Kings made their Entry together, on the first Sunday in Advent, and the Queens the next Day.

The two Courts make their Entry into Paris.

The States of France confirm the Peace of Troye. A&C. Pub. X. 30.

In the Beginning of December, the States-General met at Paris. King Charles going to the Assembly on the 6th, told them, that of his own free Will he had made a Peace with the King of England; that he was perswaded it would be beneficial to France, and desired them to confirm it by their Authority. The King's Declaration in the Condition he was in, was not a sufficient Reason to induce the States to ratify a Peace, which according to their Notions, violated the most sacred Rights of the Kingdom, in order to set the Crown on the Head of a foreign Prince. But in the State they themselves were in, it was hardly in their Power to examine the Consequences, or freely to speak their Minds. Wherefore it was unanimously resolved, that the Peace of Troye should be kept, and enacted as a Publick Law, and that all the French should be obliged to take the Oaths specified in the Treaty. This is not a proper Place to examine Henry's Pretensions to the Crown of France. They were the same that Edward III had formerly asserted; and of which I have amply spoken in the History of his Reign. But however it may be said, that at the very Time the French swore the Peace, they thought it very unjust, and consequently there could be but little Reliance on Oaths which they considered as involuntary. Accordingly they plainly showed afterwards that they made no great Account of them. And yet Henry, as great a Politician as he was, depended upon these extorted Promises, as if the French then should have been more scrupulous than those who had sworn the Peace of Bretigny.

States

On the 23d of the same Month, King Charles's Council being summoned for the Purpose, the Duke of Burgundy appeared in a Mourning Habit, and demanded Justice against the Murderers of the Duke his Father. Mexerau says, that the Dauphin was solemnly called to the Marble-Table, and not appearing, he was attainted and convicted of causing the Duke of Burgundy to be killed, pronounced unworthy of all Inheritance, particularly of the Succession to the Crown, and banished the Realm for ever. It is hard to believe that such an Historian as he, should advance such a Fact without good Authority. And yet this Sentence, which is extant in the Collection of Publick Acts, says not a Word either of the Succession to the Crown, or the Banishment of the Dauphin. The Sentence is General against all the Murderers of the Duke of Burgundy, without expressly naming the Dauphin or his Accomplices, at least in the enacting Part. It is true, that before the Acts there is mention of the Treaty between the Dauphin and Duke of Sentence upon the Murderers of the Duke of Burgundy.

ibid.

P. 33.

1420.

Burgundy; and that afterwards it is said, the Duke of Burgundy was killed by him; which Words, by him, manifestly relate to the Dauphin, mentioned several Lines above. It appears however, that the Sentence was worded in such a manner that the Dauphin was included only in the general Notion of the Murderers of the Duke of Burgundy, and that it does not seem to point particularly at him. Consequently it was not natural to speak of the Succession to the Crown. So that in all Appearance, Mezerai had a greater Regard to the Intent of the Decree, than to the Words themselves.

The Dauphin appeals to God and his Sword.

The Dauphin finding that all sorts of Means were used to deprive him of the Crown, appealed to God and his Sword, from whatever had been hitherto, or should be for the future, transacted against him in the Name of the King his Father, and continued still to assume the Title of Regent. As such he removed the Parliament and University of Paris to Poitiers, where some of the Members of these two Bodies repaired. Thus were seen at the same Time in France, two Kings, two Queens, two Regents, all the Officers of the Crown double, seven or eight Marshals of France on each Side, two Parliaments, and two Universities of Paris.

1421.

France divided between two Factions.

Though Henry was declared Regent, and Heir of France, yet was it only by the Burgundian Party, who having the King in their Power, thought they had a Right to dispose of the Affairs of the Kingdom. The Dauphin had still a strong Party left, who, far from complying with what had been settled by the Peace of Troye, maintained, that supposing the King had been under no Restraint, and in perfect Health, he would have had no Right to dispose of the Crown as he had done, much less, being distempered and a Captive. The Provinces at a Distance from Paris, not being awed by the English Arms, adhered for the most Part to the Dauphin. Even the Country about the Metropolis was all divided. In one and the same Province, there were some Places for the English, and others for the lawful Heir of the King. In spite therefore of the Peace, the War was not yet over, since the two Kings were under a Necessity of driving the Dauphin out of all the Towns and and Provinces he was possessed of. This was no easy Task, though the joining of the English Forces to the Burgundian Party, made them vastly superior. 1421.

Guienne, of which Henry was in Possession of Part, was moreover of great Advantage to him, as it served to keep in Awe the Provinces beyond the Loire. Till the Death of Armagnac the Constable, this Province had rather been a Charge than a Benefit to the English. There had been constant Occasion for a standing Army, to defend it against the continual Attempts of the Party which had declared for France, about the End of the Reign of Edward III. The Houses of Armagnac and Albret, who were at the Head of this Party, had created the King of England a great deal of Trouble, particularly after the Earl of Armagnac came to have the Management of the Publick Affairs. But after the Death of that Earl, the Heads of the Party thought fit, as I before observed, to make a Truce with Henry, to the End he might not help the Duke of Burgundy by their Diversion. After the Conclusion of the Peace of Troye, they sued for Peace, because they believed they should be able to hold out no longer. Henry hoping to reap great Benefit by the quiet Possession of Guienne, readily received them into Favour, and ordered Letters of Pardon to be given them, upon their renouncing, by a Publick Instrument, the Appeal of their Ancestors to the Court of the Peers of France, in the Time of Edward III. Some say that by the Peace of Troye, Guienne was to be united to the Crown of France after the Death of Charles VI. But besides that in the Treaty of Troye there is no mention of Guienne, it plainly appears by what has been just related, that Henry had no such Intention. On the contrary it is evident, that he stuck to the Treaty of Bretigny, in order to preserve as King of England, the Sovereignty of Guienne, independent of the Crown of France.

Pardon granted to the Gascon Rebels.

Act. Pub.
X. 41,

Choisy Hist. of Charles VI.

Henry having settled his Affairs in France, in a manner so glorious for himself and his Nation, resolved to return into England, where three Things required his Presence. First, He had a mind to have his Queen crowned. Secondly, It was necessary he should call a Parliament, as well to

Henry returns to England.

1421.

Act. Pub.
X. 49.The Queen crowned.
p. 63.
A Parliament called.
The King goes to York..A Proclamation against the Pope's Col-lations.The Duke of Clarence is slain.

get the Peace of Troye confirmed, as to demand an Aid of Money which should enable him vigorously to carry on the War against the Dauphin. Lastly, There was Occasion to take some Measures against the Scots, who had sent Supplies to his Enemy, under the Command of the Earl of Buchan the Regent's Son. Upon leaving France, Henry gave the Command of his Troops to the Duke of Clarence his Brother. Then he set Sail, taking the Queen along with him, and safely arrived in England about the End of February. A few Days after, the Queen was crowned, and a Parliament called, which was to meet at Leicester the 2d Day of May.

Whilst People were busy in chusing their Representatives, the King took a Progress into several Countries, and stayed some Weeks at York. His Aim was, under Colour of showing the Queen the Country, to procure by his Presence such Members to be elected as should be favourable to him. He was very sensible that the Nation was disgusted at being obliged to defray the Expences of the Conquest of France. Some say, that it was during this Progress that the King issued a Proclamation, prohibiting the admitting into Benefices any Ecclesiasticks upon the Pope's Provisions, contrary to the Rights of the Patrons. But it is moreover likely, this Proclamation was not issued till after the Parliament of Leicester, pursuant to an Act made for that Purpose. Be that as it will, this was a mortal Blow to the Court of Rome, to whom the Clause Non-obstante, so frequently made use of by the Popes, became unserviceable, at least, with regard to the Collation of the Benefices.

Before the meeting of the Parliament, Henry received the fatal News, that the Duke of Clarence his Brother was slain April the 3d, in a Battle fought in Anjou. The Duke had led ten Thousand Men into that Province, with Design to reduce it to the Obedience of the King. Whilst he was taken up in this Expedition, he was informed that the Earl of Buchan, with seven Thousand Scots, had entered the Province, and was encamped at Bangé. At the same Time, he had false Intelligence that the Vanguard of the Scottish Army was at so great a Distance from the main Body, that it would would be an easy matter to put them to Rout, provided they were speedily attacked. Upon this Information, he suddenly put himself at the Head of his Cavalry, leaving the Earl of Salisbury Orders to follow him with the rest of the Army. When he came to Baugé, he found indeed some Scotch Troops intrenched in the Church-yard. He charged them immediately, and dismounted in order to head his Troops. But he lost so much time in forcing the Scotch Intrenchments, that the Earl of Buchan had leisure enough to come to their Relief. Then the Duke having mounted his Horse again, furiously attacked the new Comers in spite of the Unequality of his Forces. He gave, on this Occasion, Proofs of an uncommon Valour; but at length, over-powered by Numbers, and unable to bear the Thoughts of flying, he was wounded in the Face by a Scotch Knight, and killed by the Earl of Buchan himself. His Death brought on the entire Defeat of the English Cavalry, whereof Fifteen Hundred were slain, and many taken Prisoners. Among the Slain were the Earl of Kent, the Lords Grey and Ross, and several other Officers of Distinction. The Earl of Salisbury not being able to come soon enough to assist the Duke of Clarence, had however the Comfort to take from the Enemy the Body of that Prince, which he sent to the King his Brother.

The Advantage gained by the Scots made the King's Presence necessary in France. But he had still in England some Affairs which were no less urgent. The Parliament being met the 2d of May, readily confirmed the Peace of Troye so glorious to England. A Subsidy was also granted for carrying on the War against the Dauphin: but at the same time was presented to him a Petition, wherein they told him, that it was but too true that the Conquest of France proved the Ruin of England. To obtain this Subsidy, the King had laid before the Parliament a State of the Revenues and Charges of the Crown. By which Account, a Fragment whereof is inserted in the Collection of Publick Acts, it appears, that the King's Revenue amounted but to 55743 l. Sterling; and that the ordinary Expences ran away with 52235 l. so that there remained but 3508 l. to provide

The Parliament confirms the Peace of Troye, and grants a Subsidy.
Act. Pub. X 110.
They present a Petition to the King. State of the publick Revenues and Expences.
P. 113.

1421.

provide for a Dozen extraordinary Articles mentioned in the Account. The Parliament's Petition could not but be very displeasing to the King. One half of France was still unconquered, and the Provinces subject to the King were so drained, that there was no Prospect of being able to get from thence the Supplies necessary for continuing the War. Wherefore, the Burden was still to fall upon England. But the Parliament grew weary of furnishing Money, at a Time when there was more need of it than ever, by reason of the Diversion the Kingdom was threatned with from the Scots.

Affairs of Scotland with regard to England, since the Beginning of this Reign.

I have deferred till now speaking of the Affairs of Scotland, because since the Accession of Henry V. to the Crown of England, nothing had passed in Scotland which made it worth the while to break the Thread of the History. But at present it will be necessary to say a word or two about them, for the better understanding of what is to be related in the Sequel. We have seen in the late Reign, that in 1406, James Stuart, then Prince of Scotland, was detained in England, and that shortly after he became King of Scotland by the Death of his Father. This new Dignity was so far from turning to his Advantage, that it served only to cause him to be the more strictly guarded. The Duke of Albany his Uncle, who had taken upon him the Regency, tasted the Sweets of it too much, to be over-sollicitous in procuring him his Liberty. Not a Year passed but he sent Ambassadors to England, under colour of soliciting the Freedom of the King his Nephew; but his real Intention was very far from what he seemed to desire. The chief Motive of these frequent Embassies was to negotiate the Exchange of the Earl of Fife his Son for young Percy, Son of the Earl of Northumberland. The Earl had been Prisoner in England ever since the Battle of Hali-don: Percy was seized in Scotland by way of Reprisal for the King. This Exchange was effected, and yet the Embassies were no less frequent. It was ever on Pretence of treating about the Freedom of the young King, but in reality to influence the King of England to detain him in Prison. Buchanan affirms, Henry was to do it upon Condition

dition the Regency would engage not to disturb him by Diversions in favour of France: Otherwise the Scots would never have sat still and seen France attacked by the English. Mean while, as it was necessary, in order to induce the Scots to sit down in Quiet contrary to their Interest, to give them some seeming Satisfaction, the Regent demanded publickly and earnestly the Liberty of the King his Nephew. But Henry very well knew he should not oblige him in granting his Demand: On the contrary, the Difficulties he started in this Affair were a sure Means to prevent Diversions from the Scots.

In 1415, whilst Henry was preparing to pass over into France, he received Advice from the Frontiers of the North, that the Scots were resolved to besiege Berwick with Sixty Thousand Men, whereupon the Duke of Bedford had Orders to levy an Army. But it does not appear, either that the Scots did then besiege Berwick, or that the Duke of Bedford marched against them. The English Historians relate, that the King, upon the Advice I just mentioned, called a Council, in order to debate whether it would be proper to lay aside the intended Expedition against France, and heartily apply to the Conquest of Scotland; and that it was resolved the first Project should be pursued *. This may be true; but it is very probable the King was then agreed with the Duke of Albany, and that the Rumour of the Invasion, and calling of the Council in England, was only to make the People of Scotland believe that the Regent acted with Sincerity. And indeed, we do not find in the History of Scotland any Signs of so considerable an Armament in the Year 1415, or of a Resolution to besiege Berwick: Besides, that very Year a Truce was made between the two Kingdoms, whilst all Henry's Forces were employed in France. In short, Buchanan affirms, it cannot be said that

Act. Pub.
IX. 307.

* Ralph Neville Earl of Westmorland, and Lord President of the North, made a long Harangue to persuade the King to disabie the Scots before he carried the War into France. But John Duke of Exeter, the King's Uncle, replied to the Earl, and was backed by the Dukes of Clarence, Bedford, and Glocester; upon which the War with France was resolved. Duc. in vit. Chic. p. 14, &c.

1421.

Act. Pub.
IX. 417.

that during the whole Reign of Henry V, there was any War between England and Scotland, all the Hostilities committed in that Time being nothing else but mere Robberies. He alledges as a Reason, that the Duke of Albany took care how he disobliged the King of England, for fear he should set the King of Scotland at Liberty. Henry was however afraid that it would not always be in the Regent's Power to keep the Scots quiet, whose Interest it was to prevent the Ruin of France. It was doubtless from this Consideration, that in 1416, he gave King James leave to go and pass some Time in his own Kingdom, upon giving Security for his Return. He was in hopes this Journey would create between the Uncle and Nephew such Diffentions, as would divert the Scots from all Thoughts of assisting France.

The Affairs of Scotland continued in this Posture till 1419, when the Dauphin sent thither the Duke of Vendôme to crave Aid. The States being met upon this Account, the Regent could not hinder the decreeing a Levy of Seven Thousand Men, which were sent into France under the Command of the Earl of Buchan. The Victory that General gained over the Duke of Clarence at Baugé, procured him the Sword of Constable of France.

Henry could not without Concern see the Scots declare so openly for the Dauphin. He perceived, either that the Duke of Albany had not the Credit he had formerly, or that he had altered his Measures. Wherefore, in order to countermine the Dauphin's Friends in Scotland, he believed it necessary to gain the King of Scotland to his Interest, and make him his Instrument. This was partly his Design in returning to England. Upon his Arrival, he let that Prince know that it was his own Fault if he was not at Liberty, on Condition he would use his Authority in recalling his Subjects, which were in the Service of France, and make a League with him against the Dauphin. James passionately longing to be free, after a fifteen Years Imprisonment, very readily complied with whatever Henry desired of him. A private Agreement therefore was made between these two Princes, the Articles whereof are unknown, known, except one, which was that James should go to France along with Henry, and stay with him till the War was over. Henry's Aim was to interpose the King of Scotland's Authority, in order to oblige the seven Thousand Scots in the Dauphin's Service to return to their own Country. Accordingly James attended him to France with this View. But when he commanded the Earl of Buchan to return to Scotland, the Earl replied, he did not think himself bound to obey him, as long as he was in Subjection to another. For this Reason Henry from that Time treated as Rebels all the Scots that fell into his Hands.

Act. Pub.
X. 125.

Henry having finished the Affairs which called him into England, took his leave of the Queen then great with Child, and appointing the Duke of Bedford his Brother Regent in his Absence; went back to France, where his Presence was necessary. He set sail the 10th of June with a new-raised Army, amounting as some say, to four Thousand Men at Arms, and Twenty-four Thousand Archers. Upon his landing at Calais, he sent out several Detachments to take some Castles; the Dauphin had still in Picardy. At the same Time he ordered a considerable Body to march to the Relief of the Duke of Exeter, who was as it were blocked up in Paris. Then having begun his March with the rest of the Army, he came to Bois de Vincennes, from whence he went and joined his Father-in-law at Paris.

The King returns to Paris.
ibid.
127, 129.

A few Days after he had notice that the Dauphin was before Chartres, and had begun to batter the Town. As he wished for nothing more than to decide the Quarrel by a Battle, he immediately drew his Troops together, and marched directly to Chartres. But his Forces were so much superior, that the Dauphin did not think fit to stay his coming. Henry pursued him with all the speed possible; but finding he could not overtake him, fell upon Dreux, and took the Town upon Terms. It is said that during this Siege a certain Hermit came and boldly reproached him with the Calamities he brought on France by his Ambition, and threatened him with the Judgments of God. Some add, that Henry's Death, which happened the next

The Dauphin besieves Char- tres, but retires upon Henry's Coming.

Henry takes Dreux.

1421. Year, was a plain Proof that the Hermit was inspired. But such Consequences are not always just.

He returns
to Paris.

He besieges
Meaux.

Monstrelet.
Act. Pub.
X. 212.

Birth of Prince Henry.

Countess of Hainault stands Godmother.
1422.

Her Adventures.

Act. Pub.
X. 67.
p. 134.

After the Siege of Dreux, the Flux being got into his Army, Henry sent his Troops into Summer-Quarters, and went and refreshed himself at Paris. He drew them together again in October, in order to go and lay Siege to Meaux, though the Season was scarce fit for such an Undertaking. Mezerai and some others were mistaken in saying, that this Siege was laid before the King went to England. It is certain, it was not begun till four Months after his Return (a). The same Historian says further, that this Place held out three Months, but he should have said seven, since the Siege began the 6th of October 1421, and ended not till the 2d of May 1422. It is true, as the Town was divided into two Parts, namely, the Town and the *March, the first was taken by Storm during the Winter; but the March held out till May.

Whilst the King was taken up in the Siege of Meaux, he received the agreeable News of his Queen's being safely brought to Bed at Windsor of a Prince, who was named Henry. The Duke of Bedford, and the Bishop of Winchester, stood Godfathers, and Jaquelina Countess of Hainault Godmother. This Princess, who had united under her Dominion Hainault, Holland, Zealand, and Friesland, had been married first to John Duke of Touren second Son of the King of France. This Prince dying in 1416, she espoused John Duke of Brabant, Cousin-German to the Duke of Burgundy. She soon grew weary of her second Husband, and under Colour of their being too near akin, formed a Design to get the Marriage annulled. To that Purpose, she procured some Knights to carry her off to England, that she might act the more freely. Her being thus carried off was no Secret to the King, since we find in the Collection of Publick Acts a Safe Conduct for this Princess. Besides upon her Arrival in England the King assigned her a Pension of a hundred Pounds Sterling a Month. His Intent was to marry her to the Duke of Gloucester,

(a) Juvenal des Ursins in his History of Charles VI led Mezerai into this Error.

* Where the Castle stood.

Gloucester, and by that Means put his Brother in Possession of four of the best Provinces of the Low Countries. The Duke of Burgundy was extremely offended at the little Regard the King had for the Duke of Brabant his Cousin, in affording Faquelina Refuge in his Dominions. This Affront in his Opinion reflected upon himself. Besides it was his Interest that Faquelina's Marriage with the Duke of Brabant should not be annulled. Mean while Henry preferring the Interests of the Duke of Gloucester to those of the Duke of Burgundy, did not seem to trouble himself much about the Occasion of Complaint he gave that Prince,

Henry was exceeding desirous of doing well for his two Brothers, who were both Princes of great Merit, and with whom he was well pleased. In 1419 he had a secret Negotiation with Joan Queen of Naples, who being pressed by her Enemies, promised to adopt the Duke of Bedford and declare him her Sole Heir. This Business having miscarried upon Queen Joan's Affairs taking a new turn, Henry had a Mind to procure the Duke of Bedford the only Daughter of Frederick Burgrave of Nuremberg, and afterwards a Daughter of the Duke of Lorrain. At the same Time, he treated about a Match between the Duke of Gloucester and Blanch of Navarre Queen Dowager of Sicily, who claimed a Right to that Kingdom. In fine, an Opportunity offering to get this Prince Faquelina Countess of Hainault, he was willing to lay hold of it, as this Marriage could not but be advantageous to England. But as her Marriage with the Duke of Brabant was first to be cancelled, this Affair could not be brought about before the King's Death.

It was not till the Beginning of May 1422, that the Besieged of the March of Meaux demanded a Capitulation: but they could obtain no other Terms but to the Prisoners of War. The King even excepted all the English, Irish, and Scots, who were in the Place, and all that had a Hand in the Death of the Duke of Burgundy; and likewise all those who had any Towns or Castles in their Power, till they had delivered them up to him. In fine, he reserved four Officers of the Garrison, namely, Lewis du 1422.

The King projects Matches for his Brothers.
Act. Pub.
X. 701-- 705.

ibid.
716, 741.

The taking of Meaux.
Act. Pub.
X. 211.
The King's Severity to the Besieged.

1422. Gnaft, Dennis de Vauris, the Bastard of Vauris, and another, in order to bring them to Justice. They were all four executed. Du Gnaft was beheaded, and the other three suffered a more shameful Death. The Bastard of Vauris was hanged upon a certain Tree, which from him was called the Tree of Vauris, because he had caused many Burgundians to be hanged on it, in revenge for the Death of the Earl of Armagnac. This was a severe Capitulation, which gave occasion to the Besieged to repent of their holding out so obstinately, when in all likelihood they had no Prospect of being relieved.

Queen Catherine returns to France.

The two Courts join at Paris.

About the Time of the surrender of Meaux, Queen Catherine arrived from England, attended by the Duke of Bedford, who had left the Regency to the Duke of Gloucester his Brother. The two Courts being joined at Bois de Vincennes, went from thence a little after, in order to keep the Whitsun-Holy-days at Paris. Henry lodged in the Louvre, and Charles in the Palace of St. Paul, where he had but a small Court, whilst the Regent-King's was numerous and splendid. On Whitsunday they dined together in Publick, the two Kings and the two Queens with Crowns on their Heads. Those of the French who had any Regard left for their Country, could not without Grief behold the King of England, though outwardly paying some Deference to the King his Father-in-law, ruling France with an absolute Power. Their Disgust was still increased by a Tax Henry imposed for the coining of a new sort of Money *. The Parisians murmured at it very much, but to no Purpose. Their Condition was very different from what it was a few Years before, when their Adherents to one of the Parties decided the Fate of both.

A new Coin in France.

The Dauphin takes la Charité and seizes Cologne.

Whilst Henry was preparing to renew the Campaign, which had been interrupted by the Queen's Arrival, News came that the Dauphin had taken la Charité, which opened him a Passage over the Loire. Shortly after Advice was was brought that he was besieging Cosne upon the same River, and that the Besieged had already capitulated to surrender, unless relieved by the Duke of Burgundy before the 18th of August. The Duke finding he was engaged in Honour to relieve that Place, desired the King to send him a Supply of Troops; to whom the King returned in Answer, that he would himself make one, and accordingly set forward immediately at the Head of his Army. But whilst he was pleasing himself with the flattering Prospect of a Victory which would render him Master of all France, he was seized with a Flux, which obliged him to halt at Senlis. However for fear his Illness should hinder Cosne from being relieved, he ordered the Duke of Bedford with the best Part of his Troops to go and join the Duke of Burgundy. The Dauphin being informed of their joining, and not being strong enough to give them Battle, retreated, and the two Dukes having nothing more to do there, marched towards Troye. In the mean Time Henry hoping his Distemper would wear off, had taken Litter in order to go to the Army. But finding he grew worse rather than better, he resolved at length to return back to Vincennes.

* The new Coin was called a Salute, whereon was stamped the Angel saluting the Blessed Virgin, one holding the Arms of France, the other of England, with the King's Title. On the Reverse, Christus Vincit, Christus regnat, Christus imperat.

The King falls sick.

The Dauphin retires.

Henry goes to Vincennes.

The Duke of Bedford, hearing of the ill State the King his Brother was in, sat out immediately from Troye, in order to come to him. He found him at the Point of Death, but expecting his approaching Dissolution with great Firmness of Mind. Before he breathed his last, he sent for the Dukes of Bedford and Exeter, the Earl of Warwick, and seven or eight English Lords more, to give them his last Instructions. He told them, “ That his Reign had been short but “ Glorious; That although his Claim to France had caused “ a great deal of Blood to be spilt, it could not be laid to “ his Charge, since nothing but Force could have brought “ the French to a reasonable Peace; That for his Part, he “ beheld his approaching Death without Concern; but “ however could not but lament the Fate of the Prince his “ Son, who by Reason of his Age was incapable of finishing “ a Work so happily begun; That therefore he intreated “ them for God’s Sake to continue strictly united together “ for the Service of the Infant-Prince, who was going to

His dying Speech.

“ be 1422. “ be their King; to take Care of his Education, and to “ give the Queen all the Consolation that lay in their Pow“ er, and of which she had so great Need. He added, that “ his last Advice to them was, to cultivate diligently the “ Friendship of the Duke of Burgundy, and be sure not to “ release the Prisoners of Azincourt, till his Son was of “ Age to hold the Reins of the Government himself.

 “ That in Case they should think fit to conclude a Peace, “ it should not be without securing the Sovereignty of “ Normandy to the Crown of England. He concluded “ with saying, That it was his Desire the Duke of Bedford
 “ should take upon him the Administration of the Affairs “ of France, and the Duke of Gloucester be Protector of “ England during his Son's Minority”.

His Steadfastness at the Approach of Death.

He declares he designed to have warred against the Infidels.
 He dies.

Having spoken these Words, he asked his Physicians how long they thought he had to live. Upon which one of them kneeling down, said with Tears in his Eyes, that without a Miracle he could not live above two Hours. This terrible Sentence giving him no manner of Concern, he sent for his Confessor, and having made his Confession, ordered his Chaplains to read the seven penitential Psalms. When they came to these Words of the 1st, Build thou the Walls of Jerusalem, he interrupted them, and declared upon the Words of a dying Prince, that after he had settled a firm Peace in France, he had resolved to go and wage War upon the Infidels, and endeavour to free Jerusalem from their Yoke. The Moment they had done Reading, this great Prince expired on the 31st of August, in the Thirty-fourth Year of his Age, after a triumphant Reign of nine Years, four Months and eleven Days. His Body was brought into England and buried at Westminster among his Ancestors, with a Funeral Pomp suitable to the Grandeur he had enjoyed whilst alive, and to the Esteem his Subjects had conceived for him. His Queen, to honour in a particular Manner the Memory of so illustrious a Spouse, caused to be laid on his Tomb a Statue of Silver gilt, as large as the Life, and extremely like him. *

If

* The Statue was only covered over with Silver-Plate gilt, but the Head

If In order to know the Character of the Monarch whose Reign we have just gone through, a Man should keep close, without any further Examination, to the Commendations given him by the Writers of his own Nation, he could not help representing him to his Mind as a Prince surpassing all the most accomplished that had ever appeared in the World before him. Not one English Historian ascribes to him the least Defect; but all with one Mouth speak of him as of a perfect Hero. On the other Hand, the French have endeavoured to draw in his Portraiture certain Shadows which tarnish the Lustre. It will be necessary therefore, in order to form a just Representation of him, to consider his Actions with their Circumstances, abstracted from the Admiration of some, and the Envy of others.

1422.
Character of Henry V.

In the first Place, with respect to the Government of his own Kingdom, he ought not to be denied his due Praise, in that he avoided to tread in the Steps of Richard II, and even of his own Father, and constantly refrained to incroach on the Liberties and Privileges of the People. His readiness at all Times to give the Royal Assent to such Acts as the Parliament judged necessary for the Welfare of the Kingdom, was a clear Evidence of his having the Good and Happiness of his People at Heart. Nevertheless in this very Thing, he was to blame to suffer himself to be carried to so great Lengths, as contrary to his own Inclination and the Dictates of his Reason, to consent to the Persecution of the Lollards, out of pure Condescension to the Clergy. Indeed it was next to impossible, that being endowed with an excellent Judgment, he should not be sensible on how slender a Foundation the Charge against them was built, in the Beginning of his Reign; and yet rather than publicly retract his Opinion, he all along feigned to believe it, just at the very Time when he showed Favour to some that were sentenced to Death, who had persisted in pleading not Guilty of the pretended Crime.

But

Head was all of Massy-Silver. All which at the Abby's Suppression was broken off, so that there is nothing to be seen now but a Headless Monument, with two Latin Verses on his Tomb.

1422. But it is not chiefly for what he acted in England, that Historians have been so lavish of their Praises; his warlike Exploits are the main Subject of his Panegyrick. And yet it may be said perhaps without magnifying Matters, that his Martial Deeds were what he was the least remarkable for, notwithstanding the glorious Success that attended his Arms. The Conquest of France considered in it self, has something Grand and Marvellous. But the View of the Posture of Affairs in that Kingdom renders it doubtless not so wonderful as it appears to be when abstracted from all its Circumstances. Lewis VIII, Father of St. Lewis, conquered England at a like Juncture, and yet no one ever took it in his Head to ascribe the Conquest solely to his Wisdom or Valour. Henry formed the Project of his Enterprize at a Time when the Civil Dissentions of the French rendered them unable to stand upon their Defence. The Towns he took from them were defended only by the Besieged themselves, without any Army ever appearing to relieve them. And yet some of these Places took him up several Months, and surrendered not till compelled by Famine.

The Battle of Azincourt is then the great and almost only warlike Exploit which can justly afford Matter for Panegyrick. In this famous Action it was that he gave Proofs of an uncommon Conduct, Resolution and Bravery. But this very Battle, the Issue whereof was to him so Glorious, affords likewise a Handle to tax him with Imprudence. It may be said, that if he came off Conqueror, it was because he had reduced himself to a Necessity of vanquishing or dying, to which a General never exposes himself, without causing his Conduct to be severely censured. Whatever the Event may be, his undertaking to retire to Calais without weighing beforehand the Difficulties of the March, and without being sure of a Passage over the Somme; his Wilfullness in resolving to pass that River in order to Force his Way through an Army so superior in Number to his own, seem not to be excused but by the Success of the Battle of Azincourt, which was a sort of Miracle. Had he lost the Day, as he should naturally have done, done, the World would not have failed to charge him with Indiscretion or Rashness. The Necessity he was reduced to during his March, if we may believe the French Historians, of offering to restore Harfleur, and repair the Damages he had done to France, plainly show how much he himself was convinced of the false Step he had made. This Battle therefore was more glorious to him on account of his personal Valour, than with regard to his Capacity in the Art of War. It must be confest, that never did Prince expose himself more in a Battle, and give more signal Proofs of true Valour than did Henry in that Day's Action.

As to his other Conquests in France, I do not know whether his greatest Admirers have Reason to wish he had met with more Opposition. What might have happened in that Case, is beyond humane Knowledge. It cannot however be denied but that the Victory of Azincourt strongly prepossesses us in his Favour. But what may be extolled in him, without Danger of being deceived, is the Excellency of his Genius, and the Solidity of his Judgment. He knew how to manage the great Undertaking he had formed with wonderful Prudence and Address, wisely taking Advantage of the several Revolutions which happened in France, and making them all turn to his Benefit. Few Princes would have known like him how to hold their Hand after so glorious a Victory as that of Azincourt, and sit down in Quiet, the which, though in appearance not so honourable as the continuation of the War, was in reality to him more advantageous. This Piece of Policy in my Opinion, is one of the best Things he ever did in his Life, and the strongest Proof of the Soundness of his Judgment. His Negotiations with the Dauphin and Duke of Burgundy at one and the same Time, and his Instructions to his Ambassadors are plain Indications of his Abilities, and how difficult it was to over-reach him.

It is no great Wonder that the prosperous Issue of his Undertakings should gain him extraordinary Commendations from his own Nation, especially as it cannot be denied that his Success was no less owing to his Prudent Conduct, than to the favourable Junctures he met with. In 1422. a Word, he forced the French to own him for Regent and Heir of their Kingdom. And this is one of those Actions which seldom fail of being praised beyond Measure. Accordingly Historians have not been satisfied with comparing him to David, Alexander, and Cæsar, but have ranked him far above these Great Men. But without going so far for Comparisons, which after all seem not altogether just, methinks he might with more Reason be put in Parallel with Edward III his Great-Grandfather. However, I should scarce make any Scruple to give the Preference to Edward. Edward had to deal with all France united against him, and the Difficulties he encountered in his Conquests were incomparably greater, and required an abler Head to surmount them than did those which opposed the Progress of Henry V.

What I have been saying of this Prince properly relates only to the main Business of his Life, his War with France. I shall now describe his other Qualifications, which though not so glaring, are no less worthy of Admiration than the glorious Success of his Arms, which has almost wholly engrossed the Attention of the Publick. It is certain he had all the Endowments of Body and Mind necessary to the forming of a Great Man. He was tall and majestick of Stature, though a little too slender and somewhat long-necked. His Hair was Black, and his Eyes of the same Colour were exceeding bright and lively. He was strong and robust, very expert in all bodily Exercises, chaste, temperate, at least after he came to the Crown, inured to Hardships, and patiently bearing Hunger and Thirst, Heat and Cold. In all these Things he was a standing Example to his Troops of Moderation and Constancy. A great Lover of Justice, he followed it himself, and saw it observed very punctually. Religious without Disguise, persevering in Piety, and constant in his private as well as publick Devotions. A great Friend of the Church and Clergy; he won by these Qualities, the Esteem and Affections of the Ecclesiasticks, who did not a little contribute to set off the Lustre of his Glory. He was prudent in Council, bold in Undertaking, and resolute in executing. As to his Valour, he gave gave continual Proofs of it throughout the whole Course of his Life. There is another Thing likewise for which he ought to be praised, he caused military Discipline to flourish again, which had been almost entirely neglected in England, ever since the Reign of Edward III. Never did the English Nation shine with such Lustre as under this renowned Prince. To this we may add, he was so fortunate, as to finish his Days in the midst of his Prosperity, and not live to see with Edward III. the Fruits of all his Labours come to nothing.

Having related what the English say to this Prince's Advantage, the Faithfulness of an Historian requires that I pass not over in Silence some Imperfections which the French upbraid him with, and which Envy and Disgust have perhaps caused them to aggravate. In the first Place, they tax him with Cruelty, and making War in a barbarous Manner. They ground their Charge not only upon the Slaughter of the Prisoners of the Battle of Azincourt, but also upon his putting to Death several Officers after the taking of Caen, Melun and Meaux. But as to the Prisoners of Azincourt, there is no dispute but the Maxims of War, and the Necessity of providing for his own Safety, will justify the Orders he gave upon that Account, granting they were not too hasty. As to his Treatment of the Burghers and Garrisons of the Places he became Master of, I confess it is not impossible but he might be swayed a little by Revenge, on the Score of the Time these brave Men made him lose; but this can only be said by Conjecture. That he used Severity toward some we know; but the Reasons why he did so we cannot say. To discuss such Matters of Fact, more Circumstances are required than are come to our Knowledge. However, with regard to those of Meaux, 'tis certain they had incurred the Guilt of several Murders, for which doubtless they deserved to be punished. It was neither unjust nor barbarous to order the Bastard of Vaurus to be hanged on the same Tree whereon he himself had caused to be hanged all the Adherents of the Duke of Burgundy that fell into his Hands. For the other three that were executed at the same Time, I know not the Reason:

1422.

but it is to be presumed, that they were not pitched upon out of all the rest of the Garrison, purely to be Instances of the Severity of the Conquerors. As for the English and Irish which were in the Service of the King's Enemies, their being excepted in the Capitulation, needs no Apology. It were to be wished for Henry's Reputation, that he could be as easily justified in refusing to give Quarter to the Scots, on Pretence that they had refused to obey their King who was actually his Prisoner.

The French accuse moreover this Prince of excessive Pride, even to the causing, as they assure us, the Marshal de l'Isle-Adam to be committed to the Bastile, for having dared to look in his Face whilst he was speaking to him. It is true, if he had no other Reason, this was a high Strain of Haughtiness and Rigour. But can it be denied that a Look, a bare Gesture, may be sometimes very offensive? And who knows but the Marshal, as he spoke, used some aggravating Circumstance, or rash Expression, which rendered him worthy of Chastisement, and which they have thought fit to conceal, in order to make what the King did appear the more odious?

Avarice is another Blemish they confidently reproach him with. They affirm, that after he was declared Regent and Heir of France, he never did one Act of Generosity either to any of the Burgundian Party who had served him, or to those of the Dauphin's, who had voluntarily submitted to him. I shall not take upon me to clear him from this Charge, especially as it does not appear that he was very liberal to the English themselves who served him, either by reason of the great Expence he was at, or because his Inclination did not lie that way. Though he had abundance of good Officers, and excellent Generals, we do not find that he rewarded them according to their Merit and Services. We must however except the Earl of Dorset, to whom he assigned a Pension of a Thousand Pound a Year, when he created him Earl of Exeter; Falstaff, to whom he gave a considerable Estate near Harfleur; le Capital de Buch of the House of Foix, who had the Lordship of Longneville; and the Earl of Salisbury, to whom he gave gave the Earldom of Perch. But after all, it is very possible that Henry's want of Liberality was the Effect of his Prudence. I have hinted before, that the Revenue of the Crown amounted not to above Fifty-six Thousand Pounds, and that he was fain to pawn his Jewels to supply what the Sums granted him by Parliament wanted to defray the Charges of the War. Was it proper to appear liberal in such Circumstances? Upon many Occasions it would be well if Sovereigns would stint their Bounties, which are but too often bestowed at the Expence of the poor People.

Lastly, An unbounded Ambition is a Vice which the French think they may justly tax him with. In order to know whether this Charge be well-grounded, a Man should examine whether he was in the Right to renew, or rather to continue a War against France, which she herself was the Occasion of by the Breach of the Treaty of Bretigny, and which she herself had commenced. But this Inquiry would be needless, after what has been said upon this Subject in the Reign of Edward III. to which recourse may be had. However, it cannot be denied but that Henry was very ambitious. His first Project was only to restore the Peace of Bretigny. But as soon as he had a Glimpse of being able to ascend the Throne of France, his Ambition hurried him beyond the Bounds he had set to himself in the Beginning of the War. I have already taken notice, that he had Thoughts of making one of his Brothers King of Naples, and the other of Sicily; and that in order to procure the Duke of Gloucester four Provinces of the Low-Countries, he made use of a Means which certainly was not very honourable. We find in the Collection of Publick Acts, that he had a Design to purchase the Dutchy of Luxemburg of the Emperor Sigismund, and to treat with him about the pretended Claim of the Emperors to the Dauphin. In fine, it appears there also, that he would have paid the Ransom of a Lord of the House of Blois, who was Prisoner to the Marquis de Bade, apparently, in order to assert one Day the Pretensions of that House to the Dutchy of Bretagne.

By

1422.
His Issue.

By Catharine of France his Queen, Henry left but one Son, of the same Name with himself, about eight or nine Months old. The Queen his Widow, forgetting she had been Wife to so great a Prince, and was descended from the most Illustrious House of Europe, married some Time after a Welsh Gentleman, one Owen Tudor, not without giving great Offence both to the English and French. 'Tis pretended that this Gentleman was descended from the ancient Kings of Wales: but I do not know whether his Extraction be well made out*. Owen Tudor had by the Queen three Sons, namely, Edmond, Jasper and Owen. The eldest married Margaret, only Daughter of John Beaufort Duke of Somerset, Grandson of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, and Catharine Reet his Third Wife. He was Father of Henry VII, whom we shall see hereafter mount the Throne, and leave it to his Posterity.

Charles VI. King of France out-lived Henry but two Months. The Death of these two Monarchs is going to open a Scence very different from that we have just beheld.

* It is likewise said that he was the Son of a Brewer. But the Meanness of his Extraction was made up by the Delicacy of his Person, being reckoned the handsomest Man of his Time.

The End of the Reign of HENRY V.

T H E

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND.

BOOK XII.

The Reign of HENRY VI; with a Dissertation on the MAID of ORLEANCE.

15. HENRY VI, Sirnamed of WINDSOR.

It looked as if Henry V had been taken out of the World just as he was within Reach of the Prize he had been contending for, by the particular Direction of Divine Providence, which is sometimes pleased to put a Stop to the best concerted Undertakings when upon the very Point of being accomplished. The

HENRY VI.
1422.
It is resolved in England to maintain young Henry's Rights to France.

Peace of Troye not being yet firmly settled, and the Prince who was to mount the Throne, but an Infant of nine Months old, every Thing seemed to concur to take from the English the Prospect of ever seeing the two Kingdoms of 1422. of France and England united under the Dominion of a King of their Nation. But on the other Hand, the noble Qualities of the Dukes of Bedford and Gloucester, Brothers of the deceased King, dispelled the Fears of the most Timorous. How great soever their late Loss might be, it was not thought irreparable, since the Valour, Experience and Wisdom of these two Princes enabled them to support the new King's Minority. Very far therefore from suffering their Courage to sink at so terrible a Blow, they let the World see, by proclaiming young Henry King of England and Heir of France, that they were determined to maintain what the King his Father had so gloriously established.

Henry VI. is proclaimed Heir of France.

The Duke of Gloucester had governed the Kingdom by the Title of Guardian, ever since the Duke of Bedford his elder Brother waited upon the Queen into France. But this Dignity being inconsistent with a King actually present in his Kingdom, ceased the Moment young Henry was proclaimed (a). It is true, the late King had ordered upon his Death-Bed, that during the Non-age of the Prince his Son, the Duke of Gloucester should be Regent or Protector of England. But this was not a sufficient Warrant for him to take upon him the Exercise of that important Office. The Confirmation of the States was also requisite. For that and some other Reasons no less urgent, the Council made haste to summon a Parliament for the 9th of November. Till the two Houses should settle the Form of the Government, during the King's Minority, the Council, whereof the Duke of Gloucester was President, issued all necessary Orders for such Matters as would not admit of Delay.

A Parliament is called.

The Welsh begin to stir.

A few Days after the Council was informed of some Motions in Wales and the adjoining Counties, which might be attended with ill Consequences. It is very likely, as the Earl of March was very considerable in those Parts, some of his most zealous Adherents had a Mind to raise

Com-

(a) A Guardian is appointed to govern in the King's Absence only, and a Regent or Protector during an Interregnum, or the Non-age of the King.

Comotions, in order to try, at such a Juncture, to revive the Earl's Claim to the Crown. It may at least be presumed, that these Endeavours appeared to be of some Moment, since besides the Orders sent by the Council to the Sheriffs upon this Occasion, Commissioners were appointed to see them put in Execution.

1422.

During the Time between the Calling and Meeting of the Parliament, died King Charles VI. at Paris, the 21st of October, having out-lived Henry V. his Son-in-law but fifty Days. His Death entirely changed the Face of Affairs. There was no question but the Dauphin would take the Title of King of France, and exert his utmost to get Possession of a Crown which he looked upon as fallen to him by the Death of the King his Father. Whilst Charles VI. was alive, many of his Subjects thought it their Duty to obey him, without inquiring whether what he did was conformable to the Laws, and beneficial to the State, because they had taken their Oath to him unconditionally. But after his Death, they believed it no less incumbent upon them, to acknowledge the Dauphin his Son for Sovereign, notwithstanding the Peace of Troye which deprived him of his Right. The Truth is, that Peace carried with it but too visible Marks of Corruption and Violence, to be ever looked upon by the honest Part of the French as a fundamental and unalterable Law; though several of them that believed it very unjust had been constrained to approve it. Thus the Dauphin, who in the latter Years of the King his Father might in some measure be counted a Rebel, stood upon better Terms, when it was in his Power to assume the Title of Sovereign.

Death of the King of France.

These Considerations obliged the Duke of Bedford, who had continued in France, seriously to reflect on the ill Consequences which this Alteration might be attended with, and to seek Means to prevent them. Charles VI. had no sooner closed his Eyes, but the Duke ordered Henry to be proclaimed King of France, and pursuant to the Will of the late King his Brother, he took himself the Title of Regent. Then he broke the Great Seal, and caused a new one

Henry VI. is proclaimed King of France at Paris.

The Duke of Bedford takes the Title of Regent.

1422.

to be made with the Arms of France and England, and the Effigies of the young King holding a Scepter in each Hand.

The French Lords swear Allegiance to Henry.

The Peace of Troye having settled the Succession of the Crown of France, the Regent thought he might, upon that Foundation, and without demanding afresh the Consent of the States, put the King his Nephew in Possession of the Kingdom. Wherefore, contenting himself with convening at Paris all the great Men which espoused the English Party, he made a Speech to them, exhorting them to recognize young Henry for their Sovereign. He insisted on the Peace of Troye, and the Oath they had taken to observe it; and endeavoured to convince them, that it was for their own as well as the Kingdom's Interest inviolably to keep it. This done, all that were present swore Allegiance to Henry, and did Homage to him, in the Person of the Regent, for the Lands they held of the Crown. The same Thing was afterwards required of those that were absent, and of the Towns in Subjection to the English.

A Deputation to Henry.

This Ceremony being over, the Regent, the Council of France, and City of Paris, sent Deputies to London, of whom the Bishop Terouenne was the Chief, to congratulate the young King upon his Accession to the Crowns of the two Kingdoms. At the same Time all the Deputies had Orders to go by the Low-Countries, and exhort the Duke of Burgundy to stand firm to the Alliance. It was feared the Death of Henry V. and of Charles VI. might cause him to alter his Measures.

*The Dauphin takes the Title of King
of France, and is crowned at Poitiers.*

Whilst the Duke of Bedford was taking all necessary Precautions to keep the Affairs of the King his Nephew in a good Posture, the Dauphin was no less intent upon his. He was at Espaly, a House belonging to the Bishop of Puy, when he heard of his Father's Death. He shed abundance of Tears at the News; whether Nature roused herself upon that Occasion, or whether he had all along preserved a filial Love for a Father, who was not to blame for the Hurt he had done him. The first Day he appeared in Mourning; but on the Morrow he put on Scarlet, and was proclaimed King of France, with all the Solemnity the State of his Court, and the Place he was in would admit of. After which, which, he came to Poitiers, whither he had removed the Parliament of Paris. He was crowned there in the Beginning of November, because the City of Rheims, where the Coronation of the Kings of France is usually performed, was in the Hands of the English. 1422.

Thus Henry VI. and Charles VII. assumed both at the same Time the Title of King of France, and disputed with one another the Possession of the Throne during Thirty Years. This makes the History of the present Reign so interwoven with that of France, that there is no separating them. The English were bent upon keeping for their young King the Crown of France, which the King his Father had obtained by his Labours, and which they believed his Ancestors had been unjustly deprived of. On the other Hand, Charles proposed likewise to take Possession of the same Crown, which they had resolved to take from him, and which, in his Opinion, he had not so much from the King his Father, seduced by ill Counsels, as from a long Train of Ancestors who had enjoyed it before him. This important Quarrel produced numberless Events, for the better Understanding of which, a pretty exact Knowledge of the Posture of the Affairs of both the Kings, in the Beginning of their Reigns is very necessary. It is no less requisite to know the Characters of the Persons that were at the Head of Affairs, as well Civil as Military, in the two Kingdoms. In fine, to have a clear Notion wherein consisted the Advantages and Disadvantages of each of the two Kings during this tedious War, it will be absolutely necessary to have a general Idea of the State France was in, with regard to the Succours each of the two Kings might have, as well from the Princes and Vassals of the Crown, as from Foreigners. This Review seems to me indispensable, in order to avoid the Obscurity which would incessantly occur, in a Recital made up of so many various Events.

In the first Place then, for the Persons of the two Kings, Charles was one and twenty Years old, and Henry but an Infant of nine Months. However, in this very Thing the Advantage lay on Henry's Side, whose Affairs were managed

Necessity of joining together the Histories of France and England.

Situation of the Affairs of both Kings.

1422. managed by two Uncles of great Abilities, and by the wisest Council then in Europe. On the contrary Charles, who never passed for an extraordinary Genius, was by reason of his Age more difficult to be ruled, his Passions hindering him from following the best Advice. To the Time he assumed the Title of King, he had distinguished himself neither by his Valour or Conduct. More prone to Pleasures than War, he appeared very unfit to restore the Affairs of the French Monarchy, which was upon the Brink of Destruction. The Murder of the Duke of Burgundy committed before his Face, and no doubt by his Orders, had raised a great Prejudice against him. He had acted with no more Conscience with regard to the Duke of Bretagne his Brother-in-law. This Prince, whom the Earl of Pontieu by a notorious Piece of Treachery had carried away by Force and long detained in Prison, came to know after his Deliverance, that the Plot was contrived against him with the Knowledge and Consent of the Dauphin. And therefore it might be said, that it was not Charles's Fault that the Duke of Bretagne did not undergo the same Fate with the Duke of Burgundy. These Things made a deep Wound in his Reputation, which was not otherwise supported by any bright Virtue or Action. All that could be said to his Advantage was, that he was not so mean-spirited as to stoop to his Enemies. But there was no need of being a great Genius, to refuse casting himself down a Precipice which he saw before his Eyes.

As to the Forces of the two Kings, it is easy to see that Henry had vastly the Advantage of his Rival in that Respect, since together with what he held in France, he had all England for him too. France was then shared between them in such a Manner, that each had whole Provinces under his Obedience, and in others, each had his Strongholds and Adherents. In the Provinces thus divided, there was scarce a walled Town but what had a Garrison for one or other Side. The which made them for above thirty Years together the Seat of the War.

Charles

Charles was possessed of all Languedoc, from whence he had not long since driven out the Earl of Foix, whilst Henry V. was employed in the Siege of Melun, and where he had appointed for Governor the Earl of Clermont, eldest Son of the Duke of Bourbon. Since that Time the Earl of Foix had attempted in vain to recover that Province.

The Dauphiné was likewise all subject to Charles, who held also Berry, Auvergne, Touraine, Part of Saintonge, the City of Rochel and Poitou. Besides, these Provinces he considered as Countries dependent of him, Provence, Maine and Anjou, for Reasons mentioned hereafter.

Henry was in Possession of Normandy and Guienne, the two best Provinces of the Kingdom. Picardy, Champagne, Brie, the Isle of France were his, excepting a few Places which still held out for King Charles. In fine, he was Master of Paris, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, which alone might be put in the Balance against a great and rich Province. He could likewise rely upon the two Burgundies, Flanders and Artois, which belonged to the Duke of Burgundy his Vassal and Ally.

From what has been said it is easy to perceive, that the War might be carried on in all the Provinces of France, Bretagne excepted, which hitherto had stood Neuter. But there were some Places more exposed than others to the Fury of the Sword, as Picardy, Champagne, Brie, and the Isle of France. The Reason is, because the English wanted before all things to clear these Provinces of King Charles's Garrisons, to the End they might attack him afterwards beyond the Laire, without being forced to leave any thing behind them. For the same Reason, it was Charles's Business to keep up the War in the same Provinces, that he might prevent his Enemies from carrying on their Conquests into the Southern Provinces, which were his last Refuge.

Having taken a View of the State of the Provinces, it will be necessary to examine the Situation the French Princes immediate Vassals of the Crown were in. And first of the Duke of Bretagne.

1422.
*Situation of
 the Duke of Bretagne.*

Ever since the Beginning of the War, John V. Duke of Bretagne, had stood Neuter, having avoided the being concerned in a Quarrel which could not fail of drawing the War into his Country, if he had been so ill-advised as to declare for either of the two Kings. But after the Peace of Troye was signed and sworn, he believed it would be no longer in his Power to continue in a State of Neutrality. Charles VI. and Henry V. being united together by the Peace, and there being but one King of France, he could not help acknowledging him, unless he would openly espouse the Side of the Dauphin. But that would have been a very imprudent Step, since the Dauphin's Affairs were in so low a Condition, that there was little Appearance of his ever being able to lift up his Head again. Upon these Accounts, as soon as the Duke saw the two Kings united, he sent Henry V. word, that he was ready to sign the Peace of Troye, and do homage for his Dutchy to King Charles. This Negotiation, though begun in 1420, could not be ended before Henry's Death. Apparently the Duke of Bretagne spun out the Time on purpose to see how the War against the Dauphin would go. Be that as it will, Henry's dying before this Affair was finished, the Duke of Bretagne saw himself in the same State he was in before the Peace of Troye, that is, at liberty to chuse Sides, or stand Neuter, as the Issue of Things should determine him. There was however one very good Reason for his being averse to side with the Dauphin, and that was, the Discovery he had made that the Dauphin had a great Hand in the Conspiracy of the Pontievrians. Nevertheless, preferring the Peace of his Subjects to the gratifying his Revenge, he had not thought fit to declare for England.

A&C. Pub.
 X. 176, 206, 228.

*The State of
 the Earl of Richmond.*

Arthur Earl of Richmont, Brother of the Duke of Bretagne, was taken Prisoner at Axin-court in 1415, and carried into England, where he remained till 1420. In the mean while, the Duke his Brother being seized by the Pontievrians, he demanded of King Henry Leave to go and work his Deliverance. Leave was granted him upon certain Terms, namely, That on Michaelmas-day 1422, Arthur should return back to London, and appear before the King,

A&C. Pub.
 X. 8.

King, or his Successor, the Lord Chancellor, or the Mayor of London.

1422.

That during the Time he was gone, he should make no Alliance with the Dauphin, or any other Person whatever, against the King of England or Duke of Burgundy, neither should he attempt any thing contrary to the Peace of Troye.

That Alan de Rohan the Duke of Bretagne's Lieutenant, the States and Barons of the Country, should promise the same Thing during the Earl's Absence from England.

For Security of the Performance of these Conditions, the Earl of Montferr was to be delivered to the King, whom he promised to restore upon the Earl of Richmond's Return to London.

The Earl ratified and swore all these Articles, and then sat out for Bretagne. The Death of Henry V. happening a Month before the Time of his Leave was expired, instead of coming back to England according to his Oath, he stayed at the Duke his Brother's Court, who was freed from his Imprisonment. Thus at the Time of the Death of Charles VI. he was really Prisoner of the English, though he was not actually in their Power; and moreover, liable to the Reproach of having broke his Word. Some have imagined they could justify him by saying, that he only stood bound to the Person of Henry V. and therefore upon that Monarch's Death looked upon himself as freed from his Oath. But this pretended Limitation of his Engagement is destroyed by the Articles above.

Hist of Ch.
VII. by
J. B. J.
Tom. I.
195.

Besides, the Situation the Duke of Bretagne was in with respect to the two Rival Kings; he was moreover spurred on to side with the English, by the Earl of Richmond his Brother, who had a great Influence over him. Arthur not only designed by that Means to free himself from the Engagement he was under; but had also some other Views which shall be mentioned hereafter. It may therefore be said, that although the Duke of Bretagne stood Neuter, or was desirous of still passing for such, he was however upon the Point of declaring for England.

As 1422.

State of the Duke of Burgundy.

As for the Duke of Burgundy, there is no Occasion to repeat here the Reasons he had to keep firm to the Alliance of the English. It will suffice to say, that he did not think the Death of the Duke his Father sufficiently revenged, whilst the Dauphin enjoyed any Part of France.

Of the Duke of Anjou King of Sicily.

Lewis III Duke of Anjou and King of Sicily, who was possessed in France, of Provence, Anjou, and Maine, was entirely in the Interests of King Charles his Brother-in-law. But he was some Time since taken up at Naples in securing the Inheritance of Joan II, Queen of that Country, who had adopted him for her Son. In his Absence Violante of Arragon his Mother had the Administration of Affairs, and remained firmly attached to King Charles her Son-in-law.

Of the Earl of Foix and his Brothers.
Othag.
Hist. of Foix and Bearn.

The House of Foix made then a very great Figure in the Kingdom *. Matthew of Castlebon, Earl of Foix and Sovereign of Bearn, dying without Issue in 1399, Elizabeth his Sister, Wife of Archembald de Grailly, Captal of Buch in Guienne, took Possession of his Dominions. Charles VI attempted to deprive the Captal and his Wife of this noble Inheritance; but they found Means to keep Possession. Archembald died in 1413, leaving five Sons, all of eminent Note. John the eldest was Earl of Foix and Bigorre, and Sovereign of Bearn. Gaston, who bore the Title of Captal of Buch, adhered to Henry V, who made him Knight of the Garter and Earl of Longueville. From him sprung the House of Candale. Archembald Lord of Noailles, the third Son, was killed on Montereau-Bridge with the Duke of Burgundy, Matthew the fourth Brother married the Heiress of Comigne. We shall see hereafter that a Quarrel

* The Earls of Foix (Part of Gascogne) were in so high Esteem in the Court of France, that they took Place of the Earls of Vendôme, though a Prince of the Blood, and lived in a State equal to most Kings in Christendom. Francis Phébus by marrying the Heiress of Navarre added that Kingdom to Foix in 1479. And by Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendôme marrying Joan Heiress of this House became King of Navarre, Earl of Foix, and Sovereign of Bearn, whose Son Henry II. King of Navarre, &c. succeeded to the Crown of France in 1589, being Grand-Father to Lewis XIV, late King of France.

a Quarrel between him and his Wife was the Occasion of ^{1422.} the Country of Cominge falling into the Hands of Charles VII. Peter the youngest of all, was at first a Franciscan Fryar, then Bishop of Lescar, and at last Cardinal and Legate a Latere in France, under the Pontificate of Martin V. He founded the College of Foix at Tho'ouse.

It appears from hence that the House of Foix was very considerable, as well for the Extent of its Dominions in the Southern Parts of France, as for the Merit of the four Brothers it consisted of. The Neighbourhood of Guienne obliged the Earls of Foix to pay great Regard to the Kings of England who were Masters of that Dukedom. Foix, Bearn, and Bigorre, could with Ease be invaded by so powerful Neighbours, and not without Difficulty be assisted by the Kings of France. Besides the Capital of Buch and the Earl of Cominge were Vassals of the King of England. An old Quarrel between the House of Foix and the Earls of Armagnac was a further Inducement to that House to continue under the Protection of the English and Duke of Burgundy, sworn Enemy of the Armagnacs. These Considerations made Henry V. upon his entering upon the Regency of France, to give the Government of Languedoc to the Earl of Foix. He bound the Earl by certain Articles to find a considerable Number of Troops, to keep that Province in Obedience to Charles VI. We have seen before that he was outed by the Dauphin, and the Earl of Clermont put in his Room. Upon the Death of Henry V. the Earl of Foix renewed the Articles of Agreement with his Successor, who made him Governour again. But it was not in his Power to dispossess the Earl of Clermont. Afterwards the Earl of Foix, seeing England did not observe the Articles, sided with King Charles. But in the Beginning of the present Reigns, he and his two Brothers had openly declared for the English.

Act. Pub.
X. 2.

On the other Hand, the Houses of Armagnac and Al- ^{Of Armagnac and Albret.} brac, very powerful in Guienne, declared for Charles VII. though a little before they had been Time-servers, and made their Peace with Henry V.

1422.
Of the Duke of Orleans and Earl of Angoulême.

Hist. of Charles
VII.

The House of Orleans consisted of two Princes, Charles Duke of Orleans, and John Earl of Angoulême his Brother, both Prisoners in England. The first had been there ever since the Battle of Azincourt in 1415. The second was given in Hostage to the Duke of Clarence in 1412, for Security of the Payment of the English Troops, which King Henry IV sent to aid the Princes in League against the Duke of Burgundy. These two Princes being Prisoners, did as to their Persons neither good nor hurt to either of the Parties; but their strong Towns were in the Disposal of King Charles. There are Authors who affirm, that the Duke of Orleans had made a Treaty with Henry V, whereby in Consideration of a great Pension which he paid yearly for his Expence, he had obtained of that Monarch a Neutrality for his City of Orleans, and all his other Towns. But this pretended Treaty is a mere Fiction, seeing the Foundation on which it is built, namely the Pension, had never any Existence. The IX and X Volumes of the Publick Acts of England are full of Pieces relating to the Duke of Orleans; and yet among so great Numbers there is not one that gives the least hint of any such Pension; much less of the pretended Treaty. Besides it is not very likely that Henry V should be willing in the Time of his Prosperity, to grant such a Neutrality for Places situated in the Heart of a Kingdom he was undertaking to conquer.

Of the Duke of Alençon.

John Duke of Alençon about thirteen or fourteen Years old, Son of the Duke of Alençon slain in the Battle of Azincourt, began to give Tokens of an uncommon Valour and Conduct, which caused him to be looked upon as a very hopeful Prince. He was firmly attached to King Charles's Side, as well as Peter his Bastard-Brother, who passed for one of the stoutest Warriors in the Kingdom.

Of the Earl of Eu.

Charles d'Artois, Earl of Eu, was Prisoner in England ever since the Battle of Azincourt. As he was not released till 1434, he made no Figure in France in the first Part of this Reign.

Of the Duke of Bourbon

John Duke of Bourbon, Head of the illustrious House of Bourbon, which was divided into several Branches, was Prisoner in England since the Year 1415. So that although he he was a Prince of great Merit, he had no Share in what passed in France. But the Earl of Clermont his eldest Son firmly adhered to King Charles, with all the Towns of the Duke his Father. 1422.

Lewis Earl of Vendôme, of the House of Bourbon, was of the Earl likewise Prisoner in England since the Battle of Azincourt. of Ven-
It is true he agreed with Henry V about his Ransom, dôme.
whereof he had even paid some Part already: But as he could not pay the rest, he was not yet released. The French Authors say, that in 1423 he made his Escape out of Prison in a miraculous Manner, and that in Memory of this Event he instituted an annual Procession at Vendôme. I do not know the manner of his Escape. But I find in the Act. Pub.
Collection of Publick Acts, that in May 1423, he was taken X. 289.
out of the Tower of London by the King's Order, and p. 197.
delivered to Sir John Cornwall who took him Prisoner at the Battle of Azincourt; that in July of the same Year, he got leave to go to France, to provide the rest of his Ransom, that upon Payment of the whole he might have Liberty to go where he pleased. In all likelihood, he satisfied the King in full, for it does not appear that he had any Demands made upon him. Wherefore I do not see what Miracle there could be in his Escape, without it was his not making an ill use of his Passport, in which Case the Miracle would not be very great. This does not hinder but that he might institute a Procession at Vendôme in Memory of his eighteen Years Captivity.

Having spoken of the Princes of the Royal Family of France, it will be proper to say a Word or two of the other Lords and Generals in the Service of King Charles.

The Earl of Buchan a Scotchman, Son of the Regent of Scotland, and First-Cousin to King James I, was Constable of France; a Dignity conferred upon him by the Dauphin, after the Fight of Bauge. The Earl of Buchan.

Among the other Generals, the most noted were the Other Ge-Marshals of Fayette, and Severac; Andrew de Laval Lord nerals. of Loheac, John d' Harcourt Earl of Annale, John de la Haye Lord of Colonge, Culant afterwards High-Admiral, Ajmeri Viscount of Narbonne, Pothou of Xantrailles, Ste-

1422. phen de la Hire, surnamed Vignoles, Grvanille and some others of an inferior Rank or less Note. To these I add the Bastard of Orleans, natural Brother of the Duke, though as yet he did but begin to appear in the World, because he rendered himself very famous in the History of this Reign.

State of Charles's Court.

Mary Queen of France.

After having mentioned the Generals, it will be further necessary to say something of the most eminent Persons belonging to the Court of the new King. I have already spoken of the Person and Qualities of King Charles. Mary of Anjou his Queen was a Princess of exceeding great Beauty, but much more valuable for her extraordinary Merit. Notwithstanding he loved her not as he ought, and as she deserved, being continually drawn aside by other Amours, which possessed in his Heart the Place she ought to have held. How grievous soever the King's Coldness to her might be, she bore it with a great deal of Firmness, without the least Murmur or Reproach, hoping at length to gain his Affection by her Patience, Moderation, and dutiful Behaviour. If this Conduct was not capable of inspiring the King with a Tenderness for so accomplished a Spouse, it engrossed at least all his Esteem, and forced him to show it by consulting her generally in his most important Affairs.

The Queen
of Sicily.

Violante of Arragon, Queen of Sicily and Mother of the Queen, was almost always at the Court of Charles, where her Merit and Capacity gained her great Credit.

Tannegui
du Châtel.

Tannegui du Châtel was the King's chief Favourite. It was he that first struck the late Duke of Burgundy on Montereau-Bridge. There was no Question but as he was the foremost in the Execution, so he had been the Principal in advising that detestable Treachery. However all the French Writers will have him pass for a very honest Man. I do not know how that Character can be reconciled with that Deed, which let them say what they please, was but too much premeditated.

Louvet.

Louvet President of Provence was next in the King's Favour. He had the Management of the Finances. As he was very greedy, and exceeding ambitious, he generally pre-preferred his own to his Master's Interests. It is said he was one of the Advisers of the Duke of Burgundy's Murder. On the other Hand, the Duke of Bretagne looked upon this Minister, as well as d'Avangour another of Charles's Courtiers, as the chief Authors of the Pontievrian Conspiracy, because they had prevailed with the Dauphin to approve it.

La Trimonille, of a very antient Family, was very much in the King's Good-Graces, though not so much as Dumouille. Châtel and Louvet. He was a Lord of great Ambition, who in spite of his High-Birth, regularly made his Court to the Favourites, in order to increale his Credit.

De Giac and the Camus de Beau-lieu, Creatures of Lou-De Giac ver, were considerable at Court, by Reason of their Patron's and Beau-lieu Interest.

These were the most noted Persons of Charles's Court, which commonly was not very numerous. Most of the Princes of the Blood were Prisoners in England, and the other Great Men found it more for their Advantage to be in the Army, the King's Circumstances not affording them any great Prospect at Court.

I shall now consider the chief Managers of the Publick Affairs of the English, both at Court and in the Army. The English Lords.

John Duke of Bedford Regent of France under the young King his Nephew, was the most accomplished Prince then in Europe: Wise, Judicious, of great Valour, Solidity and Penetration, Master of his Passions, and of a Genius superior to all about him; he seemed born for a Throne, though Providence had placed him in the Class of Subjects. To all these Qualities he added a majestick Stateliness, which became his Birth and the high Rank he held in France and England. But this he never carried beyond what was necessary to command a due Respect and Regard for his Person and Authority. In fine, to sum up his Character in a Word, he was perfectly like the late King his Brother, and in all his Actions took him for his Pattern. He had with him in France the Earls of Warwick, Salisbury, A-Generals rundel, the Duke of Somerſet, Falstaff, Talbot, and many others, all eminent for their Valour and Experience in the Art of War. The French Authors who have writ the Life 1422. Life of Charles VII, seldom speak of these Generals without an honourable Epithet. For my Part I shall content my self with barely mentioning these illustrious Persons. Their Names became so famous in the History of those Days, that all the Encomiums I can bestow on them, would add nothing to their Glory and Reputation.

Generals of the Duke of Burgundy. The Duke of Burgundy had at the same Time three Generals, whom I shall rank among the English, because they were in the Service of the same Prince. Their Actions will deserve that honourable mention should be made of them.

Earl of Ligny. The first was John de Luxemburg Earl of Ligny Son of Valeran de Luxemburg Constable of France. This General signalized himself during the whole War.

Lisle-Adam. Lisle-Adam, Marshal of France, was a bold and enterprising Warrior, and withal capable of managing the most difficult Undertaking. It was he that in 1419 made the Duke of Burgundy Master of Paris. After that his too great Haughtiness having caused him to incur the Displeasure of Henry V, he was committed to the Bastile, from whence the Duke of Bedford had lately freed him at the Instance of the Duke of Burgundy.

Toulongeon. Toulongeon, commonly called Marshal of Burgundy, was in high Esteem with the Duke his Master, on the Score of his Valour and Abilities.

The Court of England. I must now return to England, and briefly mention some of the Princes and Great Men who had the largest Share in the Administration of the young King's Affairs.

Duke of Gloucester. Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, younger Brother of the Duke of Bedford, was a Prince equally qualified for the Field and the Cabinet. His noble Endowments, set off by an extensive Knowledge of the Sciences, would have put him upon an equal Foot with the Duke his Brother, had he been more Master of his Passions, or less ambitious and haughty. I shall have frequent Occasion hereafter to make known more fully the Character of this Prince.

The Princes of Lancaster. The Princes of the House of Lancaster, legitimated by the Name of Beaufort, held the next Rank to the Duke of Gloucester. Thomas Beaufort Duke of Exeter, and Henry his

his Brother Bishop of Winchester, were Sons of John of Gaunt and Catharine Roet his third Wife. John Earl of Somerset their elder Brother was dead, and had left four Sons, of whom Henry the eldest bore the Title of Earl of Somerset. Of the other three, Thomas, John, and Edmund, the last only was at Court, the other two being Prisoners in France. 1422.

Richard Duke of York, Son of Richard Earl of Cambridge Duke of York. beheaded at Southampton in 1415, and Grandson of Edmund de Langley Duke of York fourth Son of Edward III, was the only Male-Issue of this Family. He was very young at the Time I am speaking of, but I shall often have occasion to mention him before this Reign is over.

Humphrey Earl of Stafford was Son of Ann of Gloucester Other Daughter of the unfortunate Duke of Gloucester, whom Richard II his Nephew caused to be strangled at Calais. Lords.

Henry Earl of Essex, Half-Brother of the Earl of Stafford had married Isabella Sister of the young Duke of York.

Ralph Neville Earl of Westmorland was allied to the Royal Family by his Marriage with Joan Beaufort Sister of the Duke of Exeter and Bishop of Winchester.

Thomas Courtney Earl of Devonshire, had for Wife a Sister of the Duke of Somerset.

Henry Talbot had married a Sister of the Earl of Essex before-mentioned.

Henry Holland Earl of Huntington, descended from a Half Sister of Richard II, was Prisoner in France since the Battle of Baugé, wherein the Duke of Clarence was slain.

Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland and John Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel had taken to Wife a Princesses of the House of March.

Nothing more remains, in order to give a general Knowledge of the Affairs of the two contending Kings, but to see how some foreign Princes stood affected upon their Account.

It is pretty strange, that during this long War, which lasted thirty-eight Years, no Prince in Europe should have any Concern in it. Immediately after the Peace of Troye,
How the Princes of Europe stood affected with regard to the two Henry Kings.

1422.

Henry V sent Ambassadors to several Parts to make Alliances with Design to render himself so much superior to the Dauphin, that it might be out of his Power to make any Resistance. But we do not find that he succeeded in his Purpose: If he made Alliances with some Princes, they were so worded, that they did not oblige them to have any Thing to do with the Wars in France. So that he reaped but little Advantage from thence.

The Emperor.

The Emperor Sigismund might by Virtue of his League with Henry V have assisted his Son. But he was himself embroiled in Troubles on the Score of Religion in Bohemia, which wholly engrossed him. The rest of the German Princes were unconcerned at what passed in France. They were not sorry to see the English and French unable, by Reason of their Dissention, to disturb their Neighbours.

Italy.

All Italy stood Neuter. The Duke of Milan alone inclined to King Charles's Side, but hitherto he had sent him no Supplies.

Spain.

Castile, Aragon, and Portugal were at Peace, or in Truce with the two Rival Kings, and assisted neither. Their Policy was to let them Battle one another in order to Side afterwards with the Conqueror.

Duke of Lorrain.

The Duke of Lorrain was inclined to King Charles on the Score of the Alliance between their Families. But he durst not aid him, for fear of drawing the War into his Country.

Among all the neighbouring Princes of France, Amadeus, first Duke of Savoy, and Lewis de Châlon Prince of Orange, were those on whom the Eyes of both Parties were chiefly fixt by Reason of the Diversions which it was in their Power to make in Provence and Dauphiné. Mean while these two Princes stood Neuter as yet, pleased with being courted by both Sides. It was however no hard Matter to see that they leaned towards the English, on account of the Duke of Burgundy, the Prince of Orange being his Nephew, and the Duke of Savoy his Vassal.

The Low-Countries.

As for the Neighbours of England, there were none but the Princes of the Low-Countries and the Scots, that could be concerned in the War to any great Purpose, either for or

or against the two Kings. The Duke of Burgundy possessed Flanders and Artois. John of Burgundy his first Cousin, held Brabant and the Earldom of Limbourg. Moreover, by his Marriage with Jaquelina of Bavaria, Daughter of the late Earl of Hainault, he had acquired the Sovereignty of Hainault, Holland, Zeland and Friseland. The first of these two Princes was firmly united with the English, and the other took care how he declared against them, for fear of depriving his Subjects of the Benefit of trading with England, which was very great.

As for the Scots, the War in France was not to them an Scotland. indifferent Thing. It is certain, their Interest required that they should to the utmost of their Power endeavour to put a Stop to the Progress of the English in that Kingdom. Besides their old Alliance whereby they were obliged to assist the French, it was easy for them to perceive that it could not but be very dangerous to their State, to suffer the King of England to grow so very powerful. And yet the private Interests of the Regent had hindered them from taking the Course which best squared with the Good of their Country, till at length they sent an Aid of Seven Thousand Men to the Dauphin. Since that time, being grown more and more sensible of their Error, in permitting the English to become Masters of France, they had resolved to send thither a more powerful Supply. But the Duke of Albany dying in the mean Time, and Mordac his eldest Son, a Prince of a narrow Genius, having succeeded him in the Regency, intestine Troubles arose which prevented the Scots from executing their Purpose. So that till the Death of Henry V. they had acted nothing in that Respect, and King James was returned to England Prisoner as before.

Here I shall end this Digression, which will not appear needless, when we come to see the Relation it bears to the Events hereafter mentioned. And thus having laid down a general Plan of the Affairs of the two Kings, it is time to resume the Thread of our History.

1422.
The Parliament meets.

The Privy-Council settled.

The Duke of Bedford is made Protector;

and in his Absence the Duke of Gloucester.
Act. Pub.
X. 261.
p. 268.

The Parliament met on the 9th of November, pursuant to the Summons. The Duke of Gloucester by a Patent under the Great Seal, was commissioned to hold it in the King's Name, according to the usual Practice, when the Sovereign is not in a Condition to be present in Person. The first Thing the Parliament did was to settle the Government during the King's Minority. They nominated the Members of the Council, filled the Offices of the Crown, and gave the Great Seal to the Bishop of Durham, and not to the Bishop of Winchester, as some affirm. To pursue the Scheme which had been formed, it was necessary to appoint a Protector, who should take upon him the Administration of the publick Affairs during the Minority. Henry V. had ordered as he lay a dying, that this high Dignity should be conferred on the Duke of Gloucester his Brother. But this could not be done without great Injury to the Duke of Bedford, who was the eldest of the two Brothers; the first Person in the Kingdom next the King, and Heir-apparent of the Crown as long as Henry should be without Issue. By this Means he would have been below the Duke of Gloucester his younger Brother. It is true, he was Regent of France: But it was very possible he might return to England during a Minority which was to last so many Years. Wherefore they were obliged to find out some Expedient to perform the deceased King's Will, without derogating from the Right of the elder Brother. After a serious Debate, the Parliament nominated the Duke of Bedford Protector of England, Defender of the Church, and first Counsellor to the King. But a Clause was added, that this Prince should not exercise this Office but whilst he was in the Kingdom, without having any thing to do with the Government in his Absence. At the same time the Protectorship was likewise conferred on the Duke of Gloucester, with Power to act only in the Absence of the Duke of Bedford his Brother, who upon his Return to England was to be acknowledged for sole Protector. The Protector's Salary was settled at Eight Thousand Marks a Year.

It has been already observed, that the Duke of Gloucester was not so great a Master of his Passions as the Duke of Bedford his Brother. He could but ill brook any Opposition to his Will. For this Reason the Privy-Council were always upon their Guard to hinder him from assuming a greater Authority than his Station entitled him to. As they held not their Places of Him but of the Parliament, they were not so much afraid of displeasing him, knowing it was not in his Power to turn them out. And therefore, in the Council-Hall there was a sort of Confederacy against him, at the Head of which was the Bishop of Winchester his Uncle. The Opposition of the Bishop against the Protector, ended at length in a Quarrel; the sad Effects whereof we shall have Occasion to mention in the Sequel of this Reign.

1422.
Jealousy of the Council against the Duke of Gloucester.

Having settled all Matters relating to the Protectorship, the Parliament appointed Governors to take care of the King's Person and Education. These were Thomas Beauford Duke of Exeter, and Henry his Brother, Bishop of Winchester, both Great-Uncles of the King. I know not the Qualities of the Duke of Exeter, having met with no Historian that gives us his Character.

Governours appointed for the King.

As for the Bishop of Winchester, he was a Prince cut out for the World and a Court rather than for the Church. However, he is placed by some in the Class of the Learned of those Days. Ever since he was made Bishop of Winchester in 1405, his main Business was to heap up Riches; wherein he had succeeded so well, that he was reckoned the wealthiest of all the English Nobles. Henry V. his Nephew had some Regard for him: but however was apprehensive of his intriguing Temper. Hence it was that he was against the Pope's making him a Cardinal, for fear that Dignity might afford him too much room to exercise his Talents. The Truth is, he was a Man of Sense, and well-skilled in all the Means Human Prudence suggests to the Ambitious in order to compass their Ends. His Birth, Parts, Riches, and Office of Governor to the King, gave him great Credit in the Council, and of Course in all the rest of the Kingdom. In a word, he knew how to ma-

Character of the Bishop of Winchester.

1422.

Jealousy between the Duke of Gloucester and Bishop of Winchester.

nage Matters so well, that he had a better Interest than the Duke of Gloucester his Nephew, though Protector, and ruined him entirely. The Occasion of their Quarrel is not fully known. Some say that the Bishop, angry that the Duke of Gloucester was preferred before him in the Government of the Kingdom, which he would rather have had than the Tutorship of the King, never ceased plotting how to supplant him. Others on the contrary affirm, that the Duke of Gloucester hated him only because he always found him ready to oppose his assuming too great an Authority as Protector, which might in the End prove fatal to their common Master.

Few warlike Exploits during the rest of the Year, 1422.

Whilst the Courts of the two new Kings were equally busied in Affairs which would admit of no Delay, the War went on but faintly in France. Besides, the Season permitted not, that after the Death of Charles VI. on the 21st of October, great Armies should keep the Field. From that time therefore to the End of the Year 1422, the Troops of the two Kings took some rest in order to prepare a-fresh for the War. There is nothing then remarkable in this Interval, but the taking of St. Valery, a Place of great Importance, which was surrendered to the English pursuant to a Capitulation made some Months before, and of Bussi in the Earldom of Guise, by the Earl of Ligny, the Duke of Burgundy's General. On the other Hand, James de Harcourt became Master of La Rue in Picardy, and La Hire de Virey in Champagne.

1423.

Meulan taken by Storm by the French.

The Duke of Bedford's Design, according to the Scheme laid down by the late King his Brother, was to reduce all the Towns Charles had still left in the Isle of France and the adjoining Provinces, that he might afterwards attack him beyond the Loire. It was the more necessary to proceed in this Manner, because, whilst Charles held any Towns in the Country about Paris, the English durst not go from the Metropolis without leaving behind a very strong Garrison, which would very much weaken their Army. At the Time the Regent was preparing to execute his Design, he received the ill News that Granville, one of King Charles's Captains, had taken Meulan by Storm, the 4th of January. The Loss of this Town vexed him heartily, as well because it retarded the Execution of his Projects, as by reason of its Neighbourhood to Paris, it not lying about six Leagues off. Besides, the taking of a Place just under his Nose, was a sort of Affront he could hardly brook: And therefore he determined to open the Campaign with the Siege of Meulan.

Shortly after King Charles's Troops took likewise La Ferté-Milon, a little Town lying between Meaux and Soissons. But the Castle making a brave Resistance, the Marshal de L'isle-Adam had time to come to their Relief, and drive the French out of the Town.

They take also la Ferté-Milon.

In the Beginning of February the Regent went in Person and laid Siege to Meulan. As it was King Charles's Interest to keep up the War in the Isle of France, and the Neighbouring Provinces, he ordered the Earl of Aumale to go and join Stuart, who commanded the Scotch Troops, and march with him to the Relief of that Town. The French give Stuart the Title of Constable of Scotland; but it does not appear that he was stiled so by the Historians of his own Nation. I imagine the Mistake of the French sprung from their Ignorance of the English and Scotch Tongue, wherein the Title of Constable may be given to every Leader or Commander in chief of a Body of Troops, without his being for all that Constable of the Kingdom. Be that as it will, the Earl of Buchan being then in Scotland, Stuart commanded the auxiliary Troops of that Kingdom. The two Generals were actually joined. But a Contest arising about the Command, they parted again without doing any thing. Granville hearing of it, capitulated the 2d of March. The Capitulation ran, that such of the Besieged as had any Castles in their Hands, were to yield them up to the Regent. Pursuant to this Agreement, the Regent took Possession of Marcoussi, Montlery, and several other Places.

The Regent besiegs Meulan;

which capitulates.

Though these Towns are of little Consequence at this Day, yet were they then of great Importance, chiefly on account of their lying near Paris, and keeping the English at a Distance from the Loire, the which was of great Advantage 1423. vantage to King Charles. For this Reason he managed so, that his Adherents fortified themselves in those Parts, in all the Towns and Castles which were capable of making any Resistance, to the End he might continue the War there. This was the very Thing that had induced the Regent to form the Project of clearing the Isle of France of all these Garrisons. However, he could not have opened the Campaign so early, had not the Loss of Meulan obliged him to it. He had a Design in his Head of much greater Moment, which he put in Execution immediately after the retaking of that Place.

Interview of the Dukes of Bedford, Burgundy, Bretagne, and Earl of Richmond
at Amiens.
April.
Act. Pub.
X. 280.

They sign a League against King
Charles.

Marriages.

I have already observed, that the Duke of Bretagne had made some Advances towards swearing the Peace of Troye, but that the Death of Henry V. had broke off the Negotiation. The Duke of Bedford perceiving of what Consequence it was to the King his Nephew, to gain this Prince to his Interests, had spent the whole Winter in treating about an Alliance with him, by the Mediation of the Duke of Burgundy. This Negotiation having succeeded to his Wish, he came to Amiens, where he met the Duke of Burgundy and the Duke of Bretagne, with the Earl of Richmond his Brother. According to the Plan they had formed before, they signed a Defensive and Offensive League against King Charles. To render their Union the more firm, they concluded two Matches; namely, between the Duke of Bedford and Ann, fifth Sister of the Duke of Burgundy; and between the Earl of Richmond and Margaret, eldest Sister of the same Duke, and Widow of Lewis the Dauphin, who died in 1415. As the Earl of Richmond had been the Means of engaging the Duke of Bretagne in this Alliance, it was but reasonable the Earl should find his Account in it. The young Earl having an extraordinary Opinion of his own Merit, his Vanity was agreeably flattered by this Marriage. The Truth is, it was no small Honour to him to espouse a Sister of the Duke of Burgundy, Widow to a Dauphin of France. But to obtain the Princess's Consent, he was fain to agree, that according to the Custom of England she should keep the Title of Dauphiness, because she absolutely refused to take that of Countess of Richmond, which which would have given her a Rank below what she had before. The Treaty between these Princes was concluded April the 8th.

1423.

Soon after the Duke of Bedford went to Troye, where he consummated his Marriage. An Historian says, that the Duke of Burgundy had promised him the Earldom of Artois, in case he died without Male-Issue; but there was no Occasion to perform this Engagement. In conducting his Bride to Paris, the Regent stayed some Time in Champagne, to form the Siege of Pont-Sur-Seine, a small Town there, which was carried by Storm. After that, he came to Paris, and took up his Lodging in the Hôtel des Tournelles, which he had taken care to repair and furnish in a splendid Manner.

The Regent
consum-mates his Marriage.
Montrelet.

Since the Beginning of the Year, the Earl of Salisbury had been invested with the Government of Champagne and Brie, and had received Orders from the Regent to clear these two Provinces of King Charles's Garrisons. This General having taken the Field in April, went and besieged, or rather blockaded Montaign, an exceeding strong Castle, seated upon a narrow Piece of Land belonging to the Province of Burgundy, but running into Champagne. There were but Sixscore Men in the Castle; and yet by reason of its Situation it was almost impregnable. The Earl of Salisbury having formed the Blockade, left the Earl of Suffolk there with some Troops, and marched himself to other Conquests. In June he became Master of Verins, Sexanne, Epernay, and several other Places.

The Earl of Salisbury
besieges.
Montaign.
April.

Mean while, King Charles, to whom the keeping of some Towns in those Quarters was of great Consequence, ordered Tannegui de Châtel to go and relieve Montaign. The Earl of Salisbury, who had left but few Men before that Castle, fearing they might be worsted, posted immediately to their Assistance. He made such speed, that Tannegui de Châtel, who was already very far advanced, finding he was not a Match for the English, was fain to retire into Burgundy, where the French had lately surprized Mâcon and Crevant, in the two utmost Borders of that Province. Sa-

He leaves the Siege to the Earl of Suffolk.

Tannegui attempts to relieve Montaign.

Salisbury

1423.
Salisbury
besieges Crevant.
Charles prepares to relieve it.

Salisbury followed, but not being able to overtake him, he resolved to besiege Crevant, a strong Place upon the Tenne, three Leagues from Auxerre.

Crevant is taken.

Charles had no sooner received News of this, but he ordered Stuart, who had just been reinforced by fresh Supplies from Scotland, to draw some Troops out of the neighbouring Garrisons, and go and join du Châtel, in order to attempt the Relief of Crevant. All these Forces together made up a Body of Ten Thousand Men, whereof by order of the King, the Marshal de Severac went and took the Command. But as it required some Time before they could be joined in one Body, Salisbury had leisure enough to make himself Master of the Place. After which, not knowing yet the Designs of the French, he went and joined Suffolk before Montaigne.

Orsay taken by the English.

Whilst these Things were doing in Burgundy, the Duke of Bedford laid Siege to Orsay, a small Place between Paris and Montlery. The Garrison having held out six Weeks, and not having surrendered but at Discretion, he resolved to make them an Example, for a Terror to the rest of the little Towns. All the Officers and Soldiers were carried away Prisoners to Paris, and ordered to be put to Death. But luckily for them, the Dutchess of Bedford meeting them as they were going to the Place of Execution, stopped the Proceedings and got their Pardon.

The French
besiege Crevant.

In the mean Time, the French Army which had been drawn together in Auxerrois, marched towards Crevant, which he had not been able to relieve, and laid Siege to it. The Army was commanded by Marshal de Severac, who had under him du Châtel, Stuart, Ventadour, and some other Officers of note. The Dutchess Dowager of Burgundy, who was then at Dijon, sent immediately to the Marshal Toulongeon and all the Burgundian Lords and Nobles to go and try to relieve Crevant. At the same Time she desired the Earl of Salisbury to join her Generals in order to raise the Siege. Salisbury was very sensible how necessary it was to comply with the Request of the Dutchess, and therefore leaving Part of his Troops before Montaigne, the Garrison whereof was reduced to Twenty Men, he marched

ed to Auxerre and joined the Burgundians. Next Day they went together towards Crevant. They were not in ~~all~~ above six Thousand Men ; but however some of the best Soldiers then in Europe. The Besiegers having had Intelligence of their Coming, raised the Siege in order to go and meet them, and posted themselves at some Distance from Crevant upon a Hill, where it was very difficult to break through them. The Resolution of the French Generals surprized the English and Burgundians, who seeing no Prospect of attacking them in that Post, altered their Rout, and as if they had some other Design, went and passed the Tonne at Cologn-le-Vimeux, with Intent to repass the same River at some other Place, in order to proceed to Crevant. The French finding that by this March the Station they had taken on the Hill was become useless, came down and posted themselves by the River-Side in order to defend the Pass. The two Armies stood above three Hours facing one another with the River between them. At length a Body of English having made themselves Masters of a certain Bridge, withstood the Efforts of the French Army with uncommon Resolution, and gave the rest of the Forces Time to come to their Succour. This Action, which was one of the boldest, was performed with that Bravery, Order, and Conduct, that it was not possible for the French to bear back these Troops from the Bridge. As soon as ever all the English and Burgundians were got over, they fell upon their Enemies so vigorously that they put them to Rout. The Marshal de Severac was blamed for retiring too soon, and leaving Stuart engaged in the Battle with his Scotch Troops. There were slain on the Spot about five Hundred, most of them Scots. As many more were made Prisoners, among whom were Stuart and Xaintrailles, with forty Officers of note.

The Battle of Crevant, where the French are worsted.

The Loss the French sustained on this Occasion rendering them unable to keep the Field before a victorious Army, the Earl of Salisbury returned to the Blockade of Montaign. A few Days after his Arrival, the Place capitulated, and he demolished the Fortifications. Then as he was apprehensive of no Opposition from the French, he divided his Army Mâcon and other Places taken by the English.

1423. my with the Earl of Suffolk, who took Mâcon whilst the Earl of Salisbury finished the Conquest of Champagne. After that Salisbury entered the Isle of France, and took Coucy and some other Castles.

Siege and Capitulation of Cro-toy.
Monstrelet.

In the mean Time, the Regent had laid Siege to Crotoy, a Town in Picardy, situated upon the Somme overagainst St. Valery. Ralph Boteler had the Management of this Siege, which took him up till October. At last James d' Harcourt, Governour of the Town, agreed to yield it up on the 1st of March next, if not relieved by that Time. This sort of Capitulations were very common in those Days. On the Day fixed for the Relief or Surrender of the Place, the Besiegers drew up in order of Battle just under the Walls, expecting their Enemies. If no Army appeared that Day to give them Battle, the Place was surrendered according to the Capitulation. Though the Governour of Crotoy had given Time enough to prepare for his Relief, Charles was not in Condition to attempt it, so the Town was surrendered to the Duke of Bedford.

Charles
ransoms Xaintrailles.
Ham, Guise, and Compiègne taken by Surprize.
They are retaken.

The Battle of Crevant was the more prejudicial to Charles's Affairs, as it made him lose a great many Officers of Distinction, some whereof were slain, and the rest Prisoners in the Hands of the English or Burgundians. Among the Prisoners, Xaintrailles was the Person for whom the King was the most concerned, knowing him to be one of the bravest Officers in the Kingdom, and the most capable of doing him Service. Though he had no great Stock of Money, he sent him however enough to pay his Ransom. Xaintrailles very thankfully received this Favour, and to give the King sensible Marks of his Gratitude, presently after his being released, he found Means to take Ham and Guise by Surprize. At the same Time La Hire or Vignolas did the like by Compiègne.

The Loss of these Places gave the Regent no small Uneasiness, as it obliged him to keep near Paris, in spite of the Projects he had formed. As he could not execute his Designs till the French were drove out of the Northern Provinces, he gave orders to have the three Towns just taken by Surprize, to be besieged all at once. If a Man should stay stay to relate the Particulars of all the Sieges on both Sides during this War, he would be insensibly led into a Thousand Circumstances which few People would think worth Notice. The best Way will be to keep to general Matters, and only mark in two Words the Beginnings and Issues of the Sieges.

The Regent's Design being, as I was saying, to retake these three Places, the Earl of Ligny invested Ham, and the Marshal de l'isle-Adam besieged Compiègne. But l'isle-Adam falling into an Ambush laid for him by La Hire, lost three Hundred of his Men. Nevertheless he constrained his Enemy to keep within the Walls. After Ligny had taken Ham, he went and invested Guise. Xaintrailles who commanded in that Place, perceiving that with the few People he had, he should be able to make but a faint Resistance, went away to see to get a Supply. But instead of succeeding in his Design, he fell himself into the Hands of the Burgundians, and Guise surrendered immediately. Then Ligny went and joined l'isle-Adam before Compiègne, and la Hire was forced at length to capitulate. So that all the Advantage Charles got by taking these three Places, was the making the Regent lose Time. The which however was no small Matter, considering the Posture of his Affairs. Since Charles the Duke of Bretagne had sided with the English, Charles had no Body left in France able to back him. And this made him resolve upon applying to foreign Princes for Aid. He could have no Prospect but from Philip-Maria Visconti Duke of Milan, and from the Scots. Philip was Uncle to the Duke of Orleans, and consequently a Friend of the House of Valois. His Affairs being then in a good Situation, he sent King Charles an Aid of a Thousand Men at Arms, and five Hundred Lances, just at the Time when the Loss of the Battle of Crevant had made him despair of being able to keep the Field. These Troops being arrived on the Borders of France, Grolee Governour of Lyonnais, and Culant lately made High-Admiral, went to receive them. As they were about to enter Burgundy the Governour of la Bussiere sent the Generals Word, that he was upon a Negotiation with Tonlongcon Marshal of Burgundy, to Charles receives an Aid from the Duke of Milan.

1423.

Toulong-con made Prisoner.

surrender the Town to him, and as the Marshal knew nothing of their coming, it would be easy to surprize him when he should come to take Possession. This Stratagem was executed with such Secrecy, that Toulongcon having entered la Bussiere with seven Hundred Men, was made Prisoner with all he had brought with him. The Duke his Master exchanged him afterwards for Stuart taken at Crevant.

Battle of Gravelle, where the English are worsted.

This little Advantage was not capable of making King Charles amends for all his Losses. But shortly after he had a fresh Occasion of Joy, upon receiving News that a Body of English Troops had been defeated in Maine with great Loss. John de la Pool Brother of the Earl of Sussex knowing the French had no Army in the Field, marched out of Normandy with a Body of Troops drawn out of several Garrisons into Anjou, where he burnt the Suburbs of Angers. After that he retired with a Booty of twelve Thousand Head of Cattle, which he had picked up in his Incurſion. Whilst he was buſied in this Expedition, the Earl of Aumale Governour of Anjou drew some Troops together to ſtop his Progreſs. The young Duke of Alenſon, Lobeac, Coulange, the Baſtard of Alenſon, and ſeveral others, having joined him with what Troops they could muſter up, he overtook the English at Gravelle in Maine. Pole perceiving it was impoſſible to carry off his Booty without fighting, drew up his Troops, and having made a ſort of Intrenchment with his Carriages in his Front, he received the Charge of the French with great Reſolution. But whilst his Men were fighting couragiously, a Detachment of the Enemy attacking them in the Rear, it was not poſſible for them to defend themſelves before and behind. After an obſtinate Reſiſtance they were at length defeated with Loſs of fourteen Hundred Men and all their Booty. Pole himſelf was taken Prisoner. Charles's Flatterers would ſain have made him believe that he had his Revenge for the Buſineſs of Crevant. But there was a wide Difference between theſe two Actions with reſpect to the Conſequence. The Battle of Gravelle did no manner of

of Damage to the English, whereas that of Crevant had almost ruined the Affairs of Charles. 1423.

This Success however served to raise his Hopes, especially when it was backed with the News of the Arrival of five Thousand Men brought to him from Scotland by the Earl of Buchan. This Lord was returned into his own Country to take Care of the Interests of his new Master, to whom he was entirely devoted. The Great Men of Scotland were very much inclined the same Way. The new Regent being a Prince of no great Parts or Credit, it was no hard Matter for the Earl his Brother to do King Charles Service. By his Care and Pains he had procured an Aid of five Thousand Men, commanded by Archibald Earl of Dowglass his Father-in-law. Dowglass was a Lord of great Repute in his own Country, on account of his Qualities, Estate, and Alliances, but still more considerable on the Score of his Merit and Experience in Military Affairs. At Rachel he landed his Troops, which could never come in a better Time. Charles pleaded, as we may imagine, to see these Supplies, loaded the principal Scotch Officers with Honours, Careless, and Favours. He had already conferred on the Earl of Buchan the highest Military Post, to which he could make no Addition. Dowglass was created Duke of Touraine. Stuart was made Baron of d'Aubigni, and afterwards Earl of Evreux, with License to quarter his Arms with those of France. To give the Scots a farther Mark of his Esteem and Confidence, Charles chose out of them a Company of Guards, which in Process of Time was increased to a whole Regiment. In short, he omitted nothing that could help to gain him the Affections of the Scots, to the End he might ingage them to send him greater Supplies, or make a powerful Diversion in England. Charles best Aid from Scotland.

Thus the Affairs of Charles began to be in a better Way by the Succours of the Scots and Duke of Milan, which enabled him to make Head against his Enemies. His Joy at the Arrival of these Troops, was preceeded by the Satisfaction of having a Son born on the 4th of July the same Year. He gave the young Prince the Name of Lewis, with the Title of Dauphin. He carelesse the Scots.

Besides

1423.
The Earl of Richmond quarrels with the Duke of Bedford.

Besides these lucky Turns which gave new Life to King Charles, an Event was preparing in his Favour, which was no less proper to restore his Affairs : I mean the Earl of Richmond's changing Sides, who drew after him the Duke of Bretagne. Richmond having consummated his Marriage at Dijon, where the Duke of Burgundy came with the Dauphiness his Sister, went and paid a Visit to the Duke of Bedford at Paris. During his stay there, he frequently hinted to the Duke, that he was extremely desirous of commanding the English Army, to which he offered to join a considerable Body of the Duke his Brother's Troops. But the Regent did not think proper to set at the Head of his Army a young foreign Prince who had never commanded in Chief, nor been in the Service since the Battle of Azincourt. The Earl of Richmond being of a very haughty Temper, and having a lofty Opinion of himself, could not brook this Refusal. He considered it as a high Affront, and from that Time meditated Revenge. We shall see hereafter how fully he executed his Purpose.

Truce for Burgundy and Lion-nois.

Shortly after Charles and the Duke of Burgundy made a Truce for Lyonnois and Burgundy. This Truce was absolutely necessary for these two Provinces as well as for the Duke of Savoy, by whose Means it was brought about. His Subjects and the Inhabitants of Burgundy and Lyonnois not being able to live without trading together, the War was very detrimental to these two Provinces.

Affairs of England.
Act. Pub.
X. 282, Earl of March Governour of Ireland.

Whilst France was the Seat of the War, England enjoyed a profound Tranquillity, by the good Order that had been established in the Government. In the Month of May, Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, was made Governour of Ireland with a very extensive Authority. Policy required that during the King's Minority, this Prince should be at a Distance from the Kingdom, on account of his Right to the Crown. Not that he had given any Occasion to have his Conduct called in Question. But it was not impossible that even without his Consent, he might prove the Ground of Commotions, which the Wisdom of the Council was willing to prevent. He did not set out however till February or March the next Year.

The Parliament which met on the 20th of October,^{1423.} granted the King a Subsidy * for the Support of the War in France, where King Charles still kept his Ground, notwithstanding the great Disproportion between his and his Rival's Forces. A Subsidy granted.

I have already observed that King Charles made very much of the Scots, and that the Nation began to follow Maxims altogether different from what they had done during the Regency of the Duke of Albany. The Duke of Gloucester and the Council of England, perceiving this Alteration which might prove extremely prejudicial to the King's Affairs, thought it necessary to countermine the Designs of Charles, by Means of the King of Scotland Prisoner in England ever since 1408. With this View they resolved to set him at Liberty, upon such Terms as should make him a fast Friend to England. This was in Truth the only Way to stop the Career of the Scotch Nobles, who were almost all inclined to an open Rupture with the English. Whilst the Council was thinking of Means to make this Step, without discovering too plainly their Design, an Accident happened in Scotland which saved them the Trouble of making the first Advances. Treaty about setting the King of Scotland at Liberty.

Mordec Stuart, Regent of Scotland since the Death of Buchanan. the Duke of Albany his Father, had three Sons all very ill-conditioned, and who created him a great deal of Vexation, by Reason he had neither Sense nor Resolution enough to keep them within the Bounds of their Duty. The youngest asking him one Day for a certain Hawk, and being denied, he wrung the Bird's Neck, though he knew his Father set a great Value upon it. This Action making the Regent see how difficult it would be for him to govern the Nation committed to his Care, since his own Children had so little Respect for him, he summoned the States, and proposed to them the treating with England about their King's Liberty. A Motion so agreeable to the Wishes both of Nobles and People, was received with Joy and Applause. And not to

* Of 12 Pence in the Pound for all Merchandize exported or imported, and 3 Shillings for every Tun of Wine, for three Years.

1423.

Act. Pub.
X. 294.

to afford him leisure to recant, Ambassadors were forthwith named, and a Power given them to go and negotiate the Affair. In the Temper the Council of England was in, these Ambassadors met with a very civil Reception, and Commissioners were immediately appointed to treat with them. The Commissioners Instructions ran, that they should consent to King James's Liberty upon the following Terms: That the captive Prince should pay the King the Sum of Forty, or at least of Thirty-six Thousand Marks, for the Expence they had been at in England during his Captivity: That a Truce should be made, during which neither of the two Kings should send any Aid to the other's Enemies. Moreover, they were ordered to intimate to the Scotch Ambassadors, that it would be very convenient to make a Match between their King and a Princess of the Royal Blood of England. But the Council wished, that if possible the Proposal might be first made by the Scots.

First Conference, September.
P. 299.

The first Conference upon this Affair was held at York, in the Beginning of September; and on the 10th of the same Month the Plenipotentiaries agreed, that James should have his Liberty, and might return into his own Kingdom. That he should pay at several Payments, the Sum of Forty Thousand Marks, and give Hostages for Security of Payment. At the second Conference, which was held at London on the 4th of December, all Matters relating to the Payment of the Money, and Quality of the Hostages were settled. Then it was agreed, that the King of Scotland should marry Joanna, Sister of the Duke of * Somerset, and Niece of the Duke of Exeter and Bishop of Winchester. On the Score of this Marriage, which was solemnized in the Beginning of February next Year, Henry, or the Council in his Name, abated Ten Thousand of the Forty Thousand Marks the King of Scotland was to pay.

A Match is agreed upon between James and Joanna of Somerset.
P. 302. 322.

Matters

* John Beaufort, Son of John Marquiss of Dorset, Son of John of Glouc by Catharine Swinsford, was not created Duke of Somerset and Earl of Kendale, till the 21st of Henry VI. Dugdale.

Matters being thus settled, the Ambassadors of both Nations signed a Truce for seven Years, to commence May the 1st 1424, during which each of the two Kings was obliged to hinder his Subjects from doing any thing detrimental to the other. And therefore, by this Treaty James bound himself indirectly to recall his Troops out of France before May the 1st. Nevertheless, whether he had neglected to send Orders for their Return, or whether, as is most likely, his Generals found some Pretence to evade them, these Troops, as we shall see hereafter, were in France in August. All these Negotiations being thus ended, James was conducted to the Borders, and set at Liberty in the Beginning of March.

1424.
Truce between Scotland and England.
P. 328.

An English Historian affirms, that before James quitted England, he did Homage to young Henry in Windsor-Castle for the whole Kingdom of Scotland, and swore Faith to him. It were to be wished, that in advancing a Matter of such Importance, and so very improbable, this Historian, who relates the very Words of the Oath and *Homage, had told us from whence he had it. It cannot be denied that since John Baliol, all the Kings of Scotland had constantly refused this Homage. For we must not reckon in the Number of the Kings Edward Baliol, who in order to ascend the Throne of Scotland, had made himself Slave of Edward III. But not to go back so far, it will suffice to remark, that Robert III. Father of James, flatly refused to do Homage to Henry IV. and that since then there had been no Treaty of Peace between the two Nations, but Truces only, which had settled nothing upon that Head. Wherefore James was in the same Case with the King his Mistakes of some English Historians concerning the Homage.

Hollingsh.
p. 587.

* I James Stuart, King of Scots, shall be true and faithful unto you, Lord Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and the Noble and Superior Lord of the Kingdom of Scotland; and to You I make my Fidelity for the same Kingdom of Scotland, which I hold and claim of you; and I shall bear you my Faith and Fidelity of Life and Limb, and worthy Honour against all Men; and faithfully I shall acknowledge, and shall do you Service due for the Kingdom of Scotland aforesaid, so God help me, and these Holy Evangelists. Hollingsh. p. 587. Stow's An. 364 1424. Father. If therefore he did Homage to Henry VI. it must be by virtue of some new Agreement. And yet it does not appear in the Instructions of the English Commissioners, that they had any Orders about that Matter. The Articles agreed upon by the Plenipotentiaries appointed to treat about the Liberty of King James, make no mention of this Homage, though they are very large upon Things of much less moment. The Treaty of Truce has nothing like it. In fine, in above Thirty several Acts extant in Rymer's Collection, which concern the Affairs negotiated in the Years 1423 and 1424, between the English and Scotch, there is not one Syllable alluding to any such thing. Upon all these Accounts, there is room, in my Opinion, to presume that what has been advanced by the Historian before-mentioned, and by several others after him, concerning the pretended Homage done at Windsor, is a mere Fiction of their own. They verily believed, as many do still at this very Day, that this Homage was due from the King of Scotland, and accordingly they imagined the captive King would not be suffered to go without being obliged to do it. But besides the Reasons which the Kings of Scotland had to refuse this Homage, the Silence of the Records in the Collection of Publick Acts, seems to me in this Matter a clear Demonstration. The Reader may look back to what has been said upon this Subject in the Reign of Edward I. where the respective Rights of the English and Scots were sufficiently set forth.

Beaumont taken by the French. Whilst the Liberty of the King of Scotland was negotiating in England, the War was carrying on in France with various Success. In the Beginning of the Year the French took by Storm Beaumont upon Oyle, a small Town in the Isle of France, six Miles from Pontoise.

La Charité surprized. On the other Side, one Perrinet Grasset, a Burgundian Adventurer, surprized la Charité, a Place of great Importance, which might afford the English a Passage over the Loire, and enable them to carry their Arms beyond that River.

The taking of Places by Surprize was then so frequent, 1124. that it is strange the daily Instances of it should not put the Governours more upon their Guard. The Duke of Bedford was extremely vexed to see that as fast as he forwarded the Execution of his Projects, by taking some one of the Enemy's Towns about Paris, some other was surprized, which retarded his Designs. His Scheme was as I before observed, to clear the Northern Provinces, and yet he could not bring it about. There was no End of his Work. There was a Necessity therefore, in order to pursue his Plan, to take Beaumont from the French; and with Beaumont retaken, this Intent he opened the Campaign in March with an Army of Ten Thousand Men. After he had recovered this Place, he made himself master likewise in the Isle of France of several Castles, which very much incommoded the Parisians.

Whilst he was taken up with these slight Matters, News The French was brought him that Girant, a Captain of King Charles's surprize Party, had surprized Ivry on the Frontiers of Normandy. Ivry. He posted immediately into those Parts, and not to give the It is besieged French time to provide for its Defence, laid Siege to the by the Re- Town in the Beginning of July. Girant perceiving that gent. he should not be able to hold out long in the Condition he It capitulates. was in, capitulated to surrender on the 15th of August, if Charles not relieved by that Time. King Charles being soon in- prepares to formed of this Capitulation, resolved to relieve Ivry at relieve any Rate, and to employ in that Service the Italian and Ivry. Scotch Troops lately sent him. To these he joined about eleven Thousand Men drawn out of several Provinces and Garrisons, being well aware, that without a great Superiority of Forces, it would be very difficult to accomplish his Design. All these Troops together made up an Army of Twenty Thousand Men, which was formed in Maine. Charles had never had one so strong. It was the Earl of Buchan's Earl of Place, as Constable of France, to command in chief. But Dowglas he was pleased to resign that Honour to the Earl of Dowg- command; the Army of France. lass his Father-in-law, to whom the King sent for that Purpose a Patent, constituting him his Lieutenant-General of 1424. all the Kingdom, otherwise the Constable could not have been under his Command.

He does not think fit to attack the English.

All the French Nobles of Charles's Party repaired to the Army, in order to have a Share in the Glory which was expected from this Expedition. The French beginning to march, passed on the 12th of August by the Walls of Vernuil, a Town in Perch, in the Possession of the English. The next Day they came in Sight of the English Army, which was advantageously intrenched before Ivry. Dowglas had no sooner taken a View of the Enemy's Camp, but he judged it impossible to attack it. And therefore, altering his Design on a sudden, he wheeled about, and resolved to lay Siege to Vernuil. He did not question but he should have time enough to fortify his Camp so, as to expect the English with Advantage; or in case they would not venture to attack him, the taking of Vernuil would make the King ample Satisfaction for the Loss of Ivry. Upon his appearing before Vernuil, the Garrison preposterously imagined, that he was come from defeating the English before Ivry, taking it for granted, that so much superior as he was, he would never return thus without having done something. In this Belief, which the French took care to keep them in, they surrendered upon the first Summons, and Dowglas garrisoned the Place with French.

Vernuil surrenders to him.

The Earl of Salisbury reinforces the Regent.

Upon News of the March of the French, the Earl of Salisbury had made haste to join the Regent with a Body of a Thousand Men at Arms, and Two Thousand Archers, which arrived at the Camp on the 14th. So that the English Army was about Fifteen Thousand strong.

Ivry surrenders.

The Regent approaches the French.

On the 15th of August Ivry opened her Gates to the Besiegers, pursuant to the Capitulation, and next Day the Regent marched towards Vernuil, where the French still remained. When he was about three Miles from their Camp, he sent a Herald to offer them Battle: At the same time he bid him tell Dowglas, he was come to take a Bit with him; to which the other replied, he should find the Cloth laid. Naturally it was the Duke of Bedford's Business to advance, since he was in quest of his Enemies. But knowing the impetuous Humour of the French, he did did not question but as they were superior in Number, they would come and attack him, and therefore resolved to stay and expect them. To that Purpose he pitched upon an advantageous Post for his Camp and the Field of Battle, a Piece of Ground flanked by a Hill, on which he placed Two Thousand Archers. He ordered his foremost Ranks to take such Stakes as the late King his Brother had made so good use of at the Battle of Azincourt, that they might the better withstand the Charge of the French Cavalry, among which were all the Nobles. In this Posture he waited the Enemies Resolutions, hoping they would be so imprudent as to attack him thus posted, and he was not deceived in his Expectations.

1424. and resolves to wait their coming.

The Earl of Dowglas having viewed the English Camp, called a Council of War. He represented, that the Duke of Bedford, instead of advancing, had a Mind to fight with Advantage, on a Ground he had made choice of himself; and that therefore, it was by no Means proper to go and attack him in that Place. That the Risk the King's Affairs would run was of so great Consequence, that he was of Opinion they ought not to hazard a Battle. That nevertheless, if it was judged necessary to come to an Engagement, the best way would be to pitch upon an advantageous Post, and there expect the Enemy, to the End they might not fight till after such Precautions were taken as would in some measure warrant Success. This Advice coming from the Mouth of a Foreigner, was thought too cautious by some of the Council. Amidst the Debates upon this Matter, a Party was formed against the General, which was headed by Aymeri, Viscount of Narbonne. This Lord set forth, that in case they avoided coming to a Battle with so great odds on their Side, the Reputation of the King's Arms would be ruined past Redemption: That by such a Piece of Cowardise the Troops would be so disheartned, that there would be no bringing them again to face Enemies whom one would have shunned when one ought to have fought them; That the King's Affairs could not be restored but by some great Blow, and as there could not be a fairer Opportunity to vanquish the Enemy, the letting

Dissensions in the French Council of War.

1424.

Narbonne forces Dowglass to march up to the Enemy.

Battle of Verneui', Aug. 16.

letting it slip would be betraying the Interest of the King and Kingdom. In spite of these Reasons, the Constable and the oldest Captains were of the General's Opinion. But the contrary Party were resolved to carry their Point. Narbonne their Head going out of the Council, ordered his Banner to be displayed, and began to march towards the Army. They who had been of his Mind did the same, and all the Volunteers of the Army went with them. Dowglass was enraged at this Disobedience. But neither his nor the Constable's Authority was capable of bringing them back. Had he been in his own Country, he would have left these rash Men to perish in their Folly. But as he was in a foreign Kingdom, he was afraid he should be taxed with Cowardise, or accused of having voluntarily suffered Part of his Troops to be lost. Besides, the Number of the Disobedient increasing every Moment, he saw himself constrained, though with extreme Indignation, to march with the rest of the Army. Upon their seeing the General coming, they very readily left him the Care of conducting the Army, congratulating one another upon having found Means to conquer his Obstinacy. Meanwhile, in spite of the Diligence of the Earl of Dowglass, Disorder and Confusion got to such a Head among his Troops, who were afraid of having the Victory snatched out of their Hands, that they were almost quite out of Breath when they came within Sight of the English. However, that did not hinder them from attacking the Enemies immediately, without minding those that exhorted them to rest a little before they engaged. The Italians being exposed to the Arrows of the two Thousand Archers on the Hill, were the first that took to their Heels. The French and Scots behaved better; but they had to deal with Soldiers inured to War, who were not so easily frightened. In fine, the Leaders seeing the Charge proved unsuccessful, and being sensible they should be liable to everlasting Disgrace; and some of them having also reason to dread an exemplary Punishment, chose an honourable Death before a shameful Retreat. The Earl of Dowglass, the Earl of Buchan, the Constable, Narbonne, Ventadour, Granville, Rambouillet, being slain, and many others of the most eminent wounded; there was scarce a General left to lead up the Soldiers to the Charge. Whereupon the whole Army was utterly routed, and hotly pursued. Then it was that the greatest Slaughter was made, as it usually happens on such Occasions. The Italians returning back, upon the false Information that their Side had got the better, met the victorious English, who slew great Numbers of them. These foreign Troops would have been all cut in Pieces, had not the Night put a stop to the Fury of the Conquerors. The French and Scots lost above five Thousand Men, who lay dead on the Spot, besides abundance of wounded and Prisoners. Among the last were the Marshal de la Fayette and Ganconr. The young Duke of Alençon, who had behaved that Day most gallantly, was found amongst the Dead, with some Remains of Life still in him, and by the extraordinary Care of the Regent was cured of his Wounds. But the Recovery of his Liberty cost him dear, as will appear hereafter. The English lost sixteen or seventeen Hundred of their bravest Soldiers. The 17th of August, which was the next Day after the Battle, the Regent invested Vernueil, where Rambourc commanded. This Governour would have been able to hold out a good while, had he been well stored with Provisions. But the want of Victuals, and perhaps the Consternation the Garrison was in, obliged him to surrender on the third Day. They found in Vernueil all the Baggage of the French, Scotch and Italian Generals, with the Money designed for the Payment of the Army. Upon entering the Town, the English met the Corps of the Viscount of Narbonne, as it was going to be buried, and because he was one of the Murderers of the Duke of Burgundy, they took his Body and hung it on a Gibbet.
Ram-

1414.

Duke of Alençon sa-ken Prisoner.

Vernueil surrenders to the English.

Narbonne's Body hung on a Gibbet.

After the Battle of Vernueil, the Regent left the Command of the Army to the Earl of Salisbury, and posted to Paris, where some Mutineers had raised a Sedition upon a Belief that he could not fail of being defeated by the French. This Commotion was appeased by the Death of some of the Ring-leaders: However, it made the Regent sensible,

A Commotion at Paris appeased by the Regent.

sensible,

1424.

sensible, that he should not rely too far on the Affections of the Parisians, unless it was in his Power to keep them always in Awe.

Salisbury conquers Maine.

The Earl of Salisbury finding himself strong enough to make some considerable Attempt, entered Maine, and besieged Mans, the Capital of the Province, and one of the strongest Cities in France. The Governour made a long and brave Defence. But at length, seeing no Prospect of Relief, he capitulated. After the taking of Mans, the English General invested La Ferté-Bernard, another Place in the same Province, which could hardly be carried by Storm, by reason of its Situation. Whilst part of his Troops kept this Place blocked up, he over-ran the rest of the Province, and took St. Suzanne with some other Places. He finished a glorious Campaign, and the Conquest of Maine, with taking La Ferté-Bernard, after a four Months Blockade.

A favourable Event for Charles.

The Loss of the Battle of Crevant and Vernethil had thrown King Charles's Troops and all the Towns on his Side into great Consternation. Had not Winter been coming on, in all likelihood the English would have pushed their Conquests farther. But the Respite which the Season gave King Charles, would have only delayed his Ruin a few Months, if a favourable Event, which he little dreamt of, had not given him time to breathe: I mean, the Quarrel which arose between the Dukes of Gloucester and Brabant, wherein the Duke of Burgundy was likewise engaged. One may truly say, that this Affair caused the English to lose the critical Moment, which in all probability was to determine the Fate of the House of Valois, and render them Masters of all France. This is what will plainly appear in the Sequel. But it will be necessary first to give a brief Account of the Rise of this Quarrel which proved so fatal to England.

The Affair of Hainault.

William of Bavaria late Earl of Hainault, had by Margaret his Countess Daughter of Philip le Hardi Duke of Burgundy, only one Daughter called Jaquelina, who had been married to John second Son of Charles VI. John being Dauphin by the Death of his elder Brother Lewis, died at Compiègne in 1416, and Jaquelina remained a Widow at her Father's House. The Earl her Father dying shortly after, she became Heiress of his Dominions, containing Hainault, Holland, Zeland and Friesland. So noble an Inheritance could not fail to attract the Addresses of a great many Princes. But the Countess her Mother being desirous to procure this rich Match for a Prince of her own Family, cast her Eyes on John Duke of Brabant her Nephew, and got her Daughter to marry him. This Marriage proved unfortunate. The new-married Couple soon fell at Variance, for Reasons which have nothing to do with our History: Their Quarrel grew to that Height, that at last Jaquelina ordered Matters so, that she was run away with by some English Knights, who carried her to London. I have observed in the foregoing Reign that her being thus carried off was not unknown to King Henry V. There is great likelihood that this Monarch had then thoughts of marrying Jaquelina to the Duke of Gloucester.

Upon this Princess's Arrival in England she began to think of Means how to annul her Marriage with the Duke of Brabant. To that End she applied to the Anti-Pope Benedict XIII., who though deposed by the Council of Pisa, stiffly persisted in keeping his Title and Dignity. The pretended Pope, overjoyed at being addressed to, cancelled Jaquelina's Marriage, and gave her Liberty to marry again. But whether Henry V. was afraid of disobliging the Duke of Burgundy, Cousin-German of the Duke of Brabant, or whether he thought it too irregular to make use of the Dispensation of a Pope whom he acknowledged not for such, he hastened not the Conclusion of the intended Marriage.

Henry dying in the mean while, the Duke of Gloucester believed he ought not to put off any longer a Marriage which afforded him so advantageous a Prospect. He took Jaquelina to Wife, either in the very Year 1422, or at least in the Beginning of 1423; for we find in the Collecti- A&C. Pub.
on of Publick Acts, a Petition dated February 5th, 1423, X. 279. which was presented to him under the Title of Earl of Hainault. However that be, the Duke had no sooner consummated his Marriage, but he fell to contriving the Means to take Possession of his Spouse's Dominions, which were in the Hands of the Duke of Brabant. Mean while the Duke of Burgundy foreseeing that Jaquelina's third Marriage might create a War between the two Princes her Husbands, had a Conference upon this Subject with the Duke of Bedford at Amiens, and after that another at Paris in December 1423. They agreed that this Affair should be left to the Pope's Determination, as the proper Judge of such Cases. The Duke of Brabant approved of this Expedient, because he knew very well, there was no Reason strong enough to induce the Court of Rome to annul the Marriage. But the Duke of Gloucester rejected it, protesting however that he was ready to consent to any reasonable Accommodation. Mean Time, he made Preparations to assert his Pretensions, whilst the Duke of Bedford his Brother was triumphantly carrying on the War in France. At last in the Month of October 1424 he came to Calais together with his new Spouse, bringing along with him a Body of five Thousand Men. He staid there till about the Middle of November.

1424.

The Duke of Burgundy comes to the Duke of Bedford at Paris.

He marries Bonne of Artois.

Though the Duke of Burgundy was entirely in the Interests of the Duke of Brabant, the good Understanding between him and the English still continued. He was in Hopes the Duke of Gloucester would drop his Pretensions, especially as he saw the Duke of Bedford his Brother used his Endeavours to perswade him to it. The Arrival of the English Troops at Calais alarmed him not, seeing he was ignorant as yet that they were designed against the Duke of Brabant. It was very likely that they were sent from England to reinforce the Regent. And therefore all the while the Duke of Gloucester staid at Calais, Philip was at Paris partaking of the Diversions and Entertainments made by the Regent on Account of his glorious Campaign. Upon his Return to Dijon, he celebrated his second Nuptials with Bonne of Artois, Widow of Philp Earl of Nevers his Uncle. She was Sister of the Earl of Essex Prisoner in England, and Half-Sister of Clermont eldest Son of the Duke of Bourbon.

Whilst

Whilst this Marriage was solemnizing at Dijon, the Duke of Gloucester set out from Calais and marched towards Hainault with Jaquelina his Wife. He passed through Part of the Duke of Burgundy's Dominions, without suffering his Troops to commit any Ravages, and came before Bouchain, which opened her Gates to him. Quickly after all the other Towns of Hainault submitted to him and the Dutcheſs, and ſwore Fealty to them. The News of theſe Things being brought to the Duke of Burgundy, he ordered Ligny and Iſle-Adam to draw an Army together with all poſſible ſpeed and go and join the Earl of St. Paul, Brother of the Duke of Brabant, who was making Preparations at Brussels to aid the Duke his Brother. But before we proceed any further in this Affair, it will be neceſſary to cloſe the Account of the Occurrences of the Year 1424. with what had paſſed in England this Year.

1424.
The Duke of Gloucester becomes Maſter of Hainault.

The Duke of Burgundy prepares to aid the Duke of Brabant.

Sir John Mortimer, Brother * of Edmund Earl of March, being ſome Time ſince Priſoner in the Tower, was charged with having attempted to make his Eſcape in order to go and ſtir up an Inſurrection in Wales. It was affirmed that his Deſign was to proclaim the Earl of March his Brother, and in Caſe he reſuſed, to proclaim himſelf. Whether his Crime was fully proved, or whether they were glad to get rid of a Perſon who might have had it in his Power to do Miſchief in Caſe he had eſcaped, he was condemned and executed.

The Earl of March his Brother did not long ſurvive. He died in Ireland about the latter End of the Year, without leaving any Iſſue. By his Death the Title of Earl of March and his Right to the Crown of England, from which he had been excluded by the Election of Henry IV, deſcended to Richard Duke of York his Nephew, Son of Ann his Siſter and the Earl of Cambridge * beheaded at

Death of the Earl of March.
The Duke of York is his Heir.

* He could not be Brother of Edmund according to Dugdale, who ſays Edmund had only one Brother, called Roger, who died in 16 of Richard II. without Iſſue.

 Richard de Comingburgh (in Yorkſhire) ſecond Son of Edmund de Langley Duke of York, fifth Son of Edward III, whole eldeſt Son Edward died without Iſſue.

1424. Southampton in 1415. All the English Historians unanimously affirm, that this Prince, then under Age, bore not yet the Title of Duke of York, which according to them was not conferred upon him till the Parliament held at Leicester in 1426. But we find in the Collection of Publick Acts, that he is stiled Duke of York in an Act dated February 5, 1425, that is, thirteen Months before the Parliament of Leicester, where he was only made a Knight.

1425.
Sad State of King Charles's Affairs.

In the Beginning of the Year 1425 the Affairs of King Charles were in a very sad Condition. The Battles of Crevant and Vernueil had robbed him of his Troops and his best Generals. He had neither Money nor Credit. His Revenues being all mortgaged, he saw himself unable to bring an Army into the Field. The Dukes of Burgundy and Bretagne, the two most powerful Vassals of the Crown, were in strict Alliance with the English. The King of Sicily, his Brother-in-law, had just lost Maine, and could hardly keep the rest of his Dominions. The King of Scotland, the antient Ally of France, had made a Truce with the English, which tied up his Hands, and hindred him from sending any Succours. Reduced to this wretched Pass, he found himself as it were driven beyond the Loire, without any Prospect of being able to keep any longer the Places he still had about Paris. To all this was added the Apprehension which appeared not without Ground, of quickly seeing the Enemy's Armies in Berry, Languedoc, and Dauphiné. The English called him only the Earl of Ponthieu, or by Way of Derision, the King of Bourges.

The Affair
of Harnault.

Certainly if the Duke of Gloucester had shown the same Zeal for the King his Nephew, as he did for his own Interest, and sent to the Duke of Bedford the Troops and Money he employed against the Duke of Brabant, one may reasonably presume, France's Business would have been done. Never would Charles have had it in his Power to wrest that Conquest out of the Hands of the English. This was the Critical Minute which that Nation should not have let slip. They were, as one may say, within an Ace of concluding a War which had lasted ten Years, and which in all Appearance was about to end according to their Wish, with 1425.

with securing the Crown of France to the Kings of England. The Duke of Bedford saw it plainly. He never ceased to sollicite his Brother to make the best of so favourable a Juncture, and put off the Execution of his Designs to a more convenient Season, when he might be able to employ all the Forces of France and England. But his Remonstrances were not capable of diverting the ambitious Duke from an Enterprize, which gave him the Prospect of obtaining four of the finest Provinces of the Low-Countries. He was a younger Brother, and the Succession to the Throne of England, supposing the King his Nephew should dye without Issue, was to come to his Brother before him. For this Reason he looked upon himself obliged to lay hold of this Opportunity which would raise him above the Rank of a Subject, and which was not likely to offer again. But at the same Time he caused the Duke his Brother to lose that of compleating the Conquest of France. The great Number of Garrisons he was obliged to keep in the Kingdom, where was neither Town nor Castle but what was fortified, quite drained the English Army, so that the Regent not receiving any Supplies by Reason of the unhappy Diversion of Hainault, was no more able than King Charles to bring an Army into the Field. This is the true Reason why during the Year 1425 the War was, as it were, discontinued in France, and that nothing considerable was done on either Side.

I left the Duke of Gloucester Master of Hainault, and the Duke of Burgundy preparing to snatch the Prey out of his Hands. In the Orders Burgundy gave his Generals to levy an Army, he had set forth, that having agreed with the Duke of Bedford upon an Expedient to put an End to the Quarrel, the Duke of Brabant had consented to it, but the Duke of Gloucester had rejected it. Gloucester coming to the Knowledge of what the Duke of Burgundy had given out, sent him a Letter dated at Mons, January the 12th 1424-5, taxing him with having said an Untruth. The Duke of Burgundy nettled at this Affront, returned him a very abusive Answer. He told him he lied, and offered to make good what he had advanced, in single Combat, and Continuation of the Business of Hainault. Montreict.

A challenge between the Duke of Burgundy and Gloucester.

1425. to take the Duke of Bedford for Judge *. The Duke of Gloucester accepted the Challenge, and appointed St. George's Day for the Combat. They wrote one another several other bitter Letters, the Contents whereof are of no Service in clearing up what remains of this Affair.

Braine taken by the Brabanders.

Whilst these two Princes were thus reviling one another, the Earl of St. Paul, Brother of the Duke of Brabant, besieged the little Town of Braine in Hainault, defended by two Hundred English. After a faint Resistance, the Garrison having capitulated, the Brabanders violated the Articles, put the English to the Sword, and set Fire to the Town.

Truce between the Duke of Gloucester and Brabant.
Gloucester returns to England.

Mean while, as the single Combat between the Dukes of Burgundy and Gloucester was properly to decide the main Quarrel between Gloucester and Brabant, it was thought fit a Truce should be made till the Issue of the Combat should be known. Upon signing the Truce the Duke of Gloucester set out for England. He would fain have carried his Dutches along with him, but the People of Mons were so urgent with him to leave her behind, that he could not deny their Request. He made the Magistrates however take a solemn Oath to stand by her with their Lives and Fortunes against all Persons whatever.

Charles takes Advantage of the Hai-nault Diversion.

Whilst the War of Hainault kept that of France as it were in Suspence, Charles took Measures to improve this lucky Diversion. In a great Council he held to consider the State of his Affairs, it was unanimously agreed, that there was but one Way left to get out of the wretched Condition he was in. And that was to offer the Dukes of Burgundy and Bretagne what Terms they should be pleased to require, in order to bring them off from the English. The first had openly broke with the Duke of Gloucester. The other might be gained by the Earl of Richmond his Brother, who had a great Influence over him, and moreover was very angry with the Duke of Bedford. This was a Juncture which was not to be let slip. On the other Hand, Bonne of Artois, lately married to the Duke of Burgundy, being
French

* Dugdale says, the Emperor.

French and Half-Sister to the Earl of Clermont, a zealous Stickler for the King, it was likely she would very readily endeavour to gain the Duke her Spouse. 1425.

It being resolved then to try these two Means, Charles dispatched to the Earl of Richmond private Emissaries, who told him what a great Esteem the King had for him. They hinted to him, that he had often said, he should deem himself invincible if he could but get him to command his Army. This was attacking the Prince in the most sensible Part. As he had a high Conceit of his own Merit, it was no small Pleasure to him to see King Charles offer him a Post which the Duke of Bedford had denied him even with some Signs of Disdain. However being well aware that the Persons which talked to him thus, were sent only to sound him, he contented himself with returning a civil Answer to their Compliments, and insinuating to them that he had a great Inclination to serve their Master.

He gains the Earl of Richmond and by his Means the Duke of Bretagne.

This first Step being made, Charles sent to him the Queen Dowager of Sicily his Mother-in-law, with Tannequi du Châtel, and empowered them to make him an offer of the Constable's Sword. This Post had been vacant ever since the Death of the Earl of Buchan slain in the Battle of Vernuil. The Queen of Sicily and du Châtel found the Earl very much disposed to change Sides. He was exasperated against the Duke of Bedford; and as he was extremely Haughty and Revengful, it was great Pleasure to him to think he should have an Opportunity of being revenged for the Contempt shown him. And therefore without much Sollicitation he accepted the King's Offer with great Demonstrations of Thankfulness, and promised to engage the Duke his Brother in his Interests. However he required two Conditions, without which he protested he could not accept the Honour the King was pleased to do him, neither could he promise any Thing with Regard to the Duke his Brother. The First was, that Louvet and d'Avangour the principal Authors of the Pontievrian Conspiracy, should be removed from Court. The Second, that the Duke of Burgundy should consent to his siding with King Conditions demanded by the Earl of Richmond.

Charles

1425.

Charles. His Reason for this was, because he had engaged himself by Oath with the Duke of Burgundy, in the Treaty of Amiens. He had not the same Scruple with Respect to the Duke of Bedford, though he was no less engaged with him, than with the Duke of Burgundy. But Passion very often causes the same Thing to appear with two different Faces, according to the Persons with whom we have to deal. The Queen and du Châtel very readily assured him that the King would comply with his Demands. Upon which he came to Tours, where Charles took Care to flatter his Vanity with all possible Civilities and Caresses. But however the Earl stood firm to what he had required, and told the King plainly, he could not list in his Service but upon the Terms proposed. The King gave him hopes that he would grant the First, without however fixing the Time; and as to the Second, he was pleased that he should go and talk with the Duke of Burgundy in order to get his Consent. He took likewise this Opportunity to send to the Duke of Burgundy the Bishops of Puy and Chartres, who had Orders to sound him, whether there was any Way to bring him off from the King of England's Party.

The Duke of Burgundy's intractable with regard to Charles VII.

Though the Duke of Burgundy was extremely incensed against the Duke of Gloucester, he appeared not so forward to come to an Accommodation as Charles and his Council expected. The Murder of the Duke his Father still sitting hard upon his Mind, he showed at first great Backwardness to a Reconciliation. Nevertheless, pressed by the King's Envoys who endeavoured to excuse their Master by casting the Blame on his evil Councillors, he replied, it was therefore the King's Part to dismiss those pernicious Counsellors, and then it would be Time enough to talk of an Accommodation. This was sufficient to let them see that he was not altogether inexorable, especially as he readily enough consented that the Earl of Richmond should accept of the Constable's Sword.

The King's Perplexity about his Favourites.

Charles, it seems, had reason to congratulate himself upon his good Fortune. It was in his own Power to win the Duke of Bretagne to his Side; and moreover, he had room to hope that the Duke of Burgundy was not proof against a reasonable Satisfaction. Nevertheless, the Terms imposed upon him threw him into great Perplexity. To procure these Advantages, there was a Necessity of casting off his two principal Ministers, Favourites and Confidants; namely, Tannegui du Châtel, who slew the Duke of Burgundy, and Louvet, President of Province, whom the Duke of Bretagne considered as Author of the Pontievrian Conspiracy. Du Châtel saved him part of the Trouble he was under. He came and cast himself at his Feet, intreating him in Requital of his Services, to give him leave to retire, since his Presence at Court could not for the future but be detrimental to so good a Master. It was with extreme Reluctance that the King granted his Request. It was a long time before he could come to a Resolution. Mean while, urged by the continual Instances of a faithful Servant, who desired this Favour only to give him a fresh Proof of his Zeal, he suffered him at length to retire. One meets with few Favourites who thus prefer their Master's Good to their own. Louvet, who was not so disinterested, did not think himself obliged to follow his Example. So he might keep his Post, he never mattered the King's losing all the Advantages which might be expected from an Alliance with the Duke of Bretagne.

Châtel desires leave to retire.

Louvet tries to keep his Post.

Mean while the Earl of Richmond not doubting in the least but that the King would be as good as his word in relation to Louvet, came to him at Tours, where he received from him the Constable's Sword on the 7th of March 1425. He had promised to bring off the Duke of Bretagne from the Side of England: but as he still saw Louvet and d'Avan-gour about the King, he hastned not the Performance of his Promise. Charles was willing enough to make him a Sacrifice of the last. But Louvet had a surer Footing at Court: Besides his being well-beloved by the King, one of his Daughters, Wife of the Lord de Foyeuse, shared Charles's Affections with Agnes Sorrel, who began to appear at Court as a Favourite. Wherefore, in order to win the Duke of Bretagne, Charles saw himself constrained to discard a beloved Minister, and disoblige his Mistress. This

Charles cannot think of discarding Louvet.

1425. gave him no small Concern. On the other Hand, Louvet used his utmost Endeavours to ruin the Constable in his Master's Favour. He represented to him with what Haughtiness he had acted, in imposing Terms on his Sovereign, as if he had been his Equal, and in making it to be considered as a Favour, that he was pleased to accept of the Constable's Sword. In short, he knew how to manage so, that the King being pretty obstinate in his Temper, resolved not to part with his Minister come what would.

He is forced from Court by the Constable.

The Constable, finding that they did not keep their word with him, was determined to ruin Louvet in spite of the King himself. To that Purpose, being sensible that this Minister was not beloved by the great Men at Court, he caballed with them in such a Manner, that a Plot was formed to get him removed from about the King. As soon as he was sure his Project would succeed, he withdrew from Court without taking Leave, and sent the King word he would never return as long as Louvet was there. Charles not giving himself much Trouble about his withdrawing, still persisted in the Resolution to keep his Minister. But when he saw that by Degrees the great Men retired to their Governments on divers Pretences, that they refused to obey his Orders, and that he had but two or three Towns left which he could call his own, he found he must resolve to part with Louvet, or lose his Kingdom. He was even apprehensive that the Constable would deliver up the Duke of Bretagne's Places to the English. And therefore he was fain, though much against his Will, to dismiss his Minister, who had still Credit enough to get de Giac his Creature to be received in his Room.

*The Duke of Bretagne
does Homage to Charles.*

Upon this Removal, the Constable was willing to return to Court: but Charles was so provoked with him, that he could not bear the Thought of seeing him. However, the State of his Affairs obliged him at length to admit him again. The Constable, content with having compassed his Ends, performed his Promise concerning the Duke his Brother, and brought him to Saumur, where he did Homage to the King.

Whilst the Earl of Richmond was raising Disturbances in the Court of King Charles, Henry's enjoyed no greater Tranquillity. I have already observed, that the Duke of Gloucester and Bishop of Winchester his Uncle were no great Friends. On which Side soever the Fault lay, they let no Opportunity slip of plaguing one another. The Hainault Expedition had furnished the Bishop with a large Handle against the Duke, which he knew how to make the best of.

1425.
Quarrel between the Duke of Gloucester and Bishop of Winchester.

When that Affair was proposed in Council, he was Tooth and Nail against it, and manifestly showed the Prejudice it might bring to the King's Affairs. But though he was on this Occasion on the right Side of the Question, yet the Duke of Gloucester had Interest enough to get it approved. He sat out upon his Expedition with a Mind imbittered against his Uncle, and with a Resolution to be revenged, when an Opportunity should offer.

Historians inform us not how the Government was settled during the Duke of Gloucester's Absence, which lasted about a Year. It is very likely that the Bishop of Winchester had the greatest Share in it, and that he made use of this Advantage to create his Enemy many Vexations. Some even say, that all his Proceedings tended to deprive him of the Protectorship, in order to get himself invested with that Dignity.

The Duke being returned to England about October 1425, this Quarrel was kindled afresh with great Animosity on both Sides. One Day having a Mind to go to the Tower, Sir Richard Woodville the Governour denied him Entrance, by the Advice of the Bishop of Winchester. The Protector, who was exceeding high-spirited, fell out into a great Passion with the Bishop, and proceeded even to Threatnings. In fine, the Quarrel was carried to that Height, that they both began to arm their Friends either to attack or defend. The Duke of Comimbre, Prince of Portugal, who was then in England, and the Archbishop of Canterbury endeavoured in vain to reconcile them. An Historian says, that the Bishop of Winchester was forced to fly for Refuge to the Tower, and that five or six of his People were killed by the Duke's Followers. But this is 1425. unlikely, seeing in their Complaints against one another which were laid before the ensuing Parliament, there is no mention of any such Thing.

The Duke of Bedford comes into England.

Warwick commands in France. Act. Pub. X. 339.

The Prelate having no Warriors on his Side, did by no Means find his Account in deciding the Quarrel by force of Arms. The Intrigues of the Cabinet were more within his Province. And therefore, to prevent the Mischief that might befall him in case Matters remained in this Posture, he wrote to the Duke of Bedford, desiring him to come into England. He told him in his Letter, that unless he made all imaginable haste, the Kingdom was in danger of being exposed to fatal Commotions by the violent Temper of his Brother. The Duke of Bedford perceiving the ill Consequence of this Quarrel, set out immediately, leaving in France Richard de Beauchamp Earl of Warwick to command in his Room, and arrived in England December the 20th.

1426. The Duke is received for Protector. Ibid.

As soon as the Duke set Foot in the Kingdom, he took the Title of Protector, and was received as such pursuant to the Act of Parliament in 1422. We find in the Collection of Publick Acts not only that Petitions were presented to him as Protector, but that the Parliament assigned him the Salary of Eight Thousand Marks which were annexed to that Dignity, and which the Duke of Gloucester till then had enjoyed.

Eng'land proclaims War with Bretagne. Ibid.

Ibid.

A few Days after his Arrival, the Duke of Bedford mentioned at the Council Board the Treachery of the Duke of Bretagne and the Earl of Richmond, and set forth the great Prejudice it brought to the King's Affairs. Upon his Remonstrances, and by his Advice, it was unanimously resolved to declare War against the Duke of Bretagne; the which was done on the 15th of January by Proclamation. Moreover, in order to hinder that Prince from assisting King Charles, a Resolution was taken to countenance the Pontievrians his Enemies, and try by their Means to raise a Civil War in Bretagne. To that end Safe-Conducts were dispatched to the two Brothers of that Name: but however, nothing came of it. Apparently they had not Interest enough in that Country.

This

This Affair being over, the Duke of Bedford heartily set about procuring a sincere Reconciliation between the Duke his Brother and the Bishop of Winchester. The way to succeed was to side with neither. Had he taken his Brother's Part, as the Ties of Blood seemed to require, he would not have been fit to discharge the Office of a Mediator. Moreover, besides the Character of Brother and Nephew, he had another to keep up in order to perform his Duty, and answer the Expectations of the Publick; I mean that of Protector, chiefly concerned in the Good of the State independently of the Duties of Nature. Wherefore, not to take upon him the sole Management of so nice an Affair, he convened some of the prime Nobility at St. Albans, in hopes of being able, with their Help, to find some Means to content the two Princes. But their Animosity was so great, that it was not possible to succeed this way. They were forced, after many fruitless Endeavours, to refer the Decision of the Affair to the ensuing Parliament, which was to meet at Leicester in March. Upon the Parliament's assembling, the Duke of Gloucester exhibited six Articles against the Bishop.

1426.
Continuation of the Quarrel of the Duke of Gloucester and Bishop of Winchester.

By the Ist, he accused him of having caused him to be denied Entrance into the Tower, and thereby rendered the Dignity of Protector contemptible.

Articles of Accusation against the Bishop.

The II^d ran, That he had endeavoured to carry off the King by Force from his Palace at Eltham, and remove him to Windsor, with Design to become Master of his Person.

The III^d, That not being satisfied with having caused him to be denied Admittance into the Tower, as was said in the first Article, he had laid an Ambush for him at London Bridge and in Southwark, on purpose to murder him.

The IVth, That he had concealed a Villain in the late King's Room, when he was Prince of Wales, in order to have him assassinated.

The Vth, That he had advised the said Prince to seize the Crown, before the King his Father was dead.

The VIth, That by his Letter to the Duke of Bedford, it evidently appeared that his Design was to stir up a Civil War in the Kingdom.

The 1426.

Bishop's Reply.

The Bishop gave a particular Answer to these Accusations, either by explaining such of his Actions as might have been ill construed, or by flatly denying the Facts which the Duke had laid to his Charge.

He is declared innocent.

They are made Friends outwardly.

The Parliament having appointed Commissioners to examine what had been alledged on both Sides, declared, upon their Report, that the Articles of Acculation were without Ground, and acquitted the Bishop of the Crimes he was charged with. Which done, they obliged the two Princes to become Friends. Accordingly they shook Hands and were reconciled. at least in Appearance: however, they hated one another never the less for that.

*Expedients to satisfy both Parties.
Act. Pub.
X. 153.*

Mean while, as the Times and Circumstances of Affairs would not admit that the Duke of Gloucester should be entirely sacrificed to his Enemy, the Protector took care to procure him also some Satisfaction. In the first Place, he took the Great Seal from the Bishop of Winchester and gave it to the Bishop of London. Then, as it was impossible that the two Enemies should be together at the Council-Board without great Prejudice to the King's Affairs, he prevailed with the Bishop to go with him into France, under Colour of performing a Vow. But to make amends for the Injury his Absence might do him, he had leave to sollicite a Cardinal's Cap, which was sent him indeed shortly after.

• *Mowbray restored, and the Duke of York with forty others knighted,
p. 258.*

This Affair being thus happily ended, the Protector restored John Mowbray Earl Marshal to the Title of Duke of Norfolk, which Thomas his Father was deprived of by Richard II. At the same Time he made forty Knights, among whom was the young Duke of York. It is this, no doubt, that occasioned its being said, that this Prince had in this Parliament the Title of Duke of York conferred upon him, though it is certain he bore that Title before, as has been observed.

The Constable Richmond takes Pontorson and besieges Beuvron.

Whilst the Duke of Bedford was thus employed in Eng-land, the Constable Richmond levied an Army in Bretagne. He was extremely impatient to show that he was not unworthy of the Post he was lately promoted to. By his Care and Credit he drew together a Matter of Twenty Thousand

Thousand Men. Whilst this numerous Army, which the Earl of Warwick was not in a Condition to withstand, he entered Normandy, and took Pontorson about the End of February. Then he laid Siege to St. James de Beuvron, where the English had a strong Garrison. This Siege proved longer and more difficult than he expected. He had been promised Money, but it came not. De Giac, who had the Management of the Treasury, was in no haste to send it, not being at all sorry to see him a little mortified. He was afraid that if the Constable gained any Reputation at this Siege, he would grow more haughty and enterprizing, and take upon him to rule the Court as he pleased. Mean while, the Army diminished every Day by Desertions. This unlucky Accident vexed the Constable to the Heart, apprehensive as he was that his Reputation would be shipwrecked in the very first notable Action he undertook. In fine, he received false Intelligence that the English were drawing all their Forces together, in order to raise the Siege. The Fear he was under of being disgraced, made him resolve to storm the Town, though the Breach was not yet large enough, or sufficiently prepared. Mean while, to secure himself against the Relief he was afraid of, he detached Two Thousand Men, with Orders to post themselves in the Road to Auranche, and oppose the first Attacks of the Enemies, in case they should come during the Assault. Then he caused the Breach to be very vigorously attacked. But the Garrison, which was very strong, made so brave a Resistance, as gave the Besiegers but small hopes of being Masters of it. Whilst they were fighting on both Sides with equal Bravery, the two Thousand Men hearing no News of the Enemy, and imagining it was dishonourable to stand idle, whilst the rest were engaged, hastily returned to assist at the Assault. Their coming threw the Besiegers into a Panick Fear. They fancied that the Detachment being driven back by the Enemies were flying for Refuge to the Camp, and in this Belief left off storming. The Constable did all he could to undeceive them; but they were already in so great Disorder, that it was not possible for him to make them renew the Fight.

He receives a great Mortification.

1426.

He takes two Towns in Anjou.

He causes De Giac to be strangled, and assassinates Beaulieu.

The King refuses to see him.

Fight. In the mean Time the Besieged seeing the Confusion the Camp was in, sallied out, and falling on a sudden upon Troops already in a Fright, easily put them to Rout. The Constable himself was forced to follow them and leave his Baggage and Artillery in the Hands of his Enemies, extremely concerned to see all his Projects confounded by this unlucky Accident. However, as he had not lost many of his Men, he found himself in a Condition, after drawing his Army together, to march into Anjou, and take la Flèche and Galerand which belonged to the English.

The taking of these two Places was not however capable of comforting him for the Blow he had received before St. James. He openly accused de Giac of having been the Occasion of it, and resolved to be revenged of him, without troubling himself about the King's Retentment. He was no sooner returned to Court after the Campaign, which the Desertion of his Troops had obliged him to put an End to sooner than he would have done, but he caused de Giac to be seized in his Bed, and by a Sentence as violent as irregular and rash, ordered him to be strangled, and then thrown into the Loire. After which, he had the Boldness to give out that he would serve in the same manner any Person whatever that should endeavour to ingross the King's Favour. The Comus of Beaulieu not being terrified at these Threats, and having accepted de Giac's Place, which was offered him, the Constable had him assassinated in the King's own Palace, and even before his Eyes. His Pride could not bear any Person at Court that was not his Creature. By the Way, this monstrous Arrogance ill agrees with the excessive Commendations that are bestowed on this Prince.

Charles was so provoked at these haughty Proceedings, that he would not see the Constable. He could not so much as hear him mentioned without Horror. But his Displeasure was but little minded by a Man who had for him both the Nobles and People. In the wretched State the King's Affairs were in, every one thought he did him a Favour to serve him. Upon the least Disgust all threatened to leave him and go over to the English, who received with open Arms 1426.

Arms those that were willing to submit to their King. Besides, about a Month since, the Earl of Warwick kept the Town of Montargis blocked up, and the King had no other Way to relieve that Place, but by the Help of the Bretons. Wherefore notwithstanding the outrageous Affronts he had received from the Constable, he gave leave, at the Instance of La Trimonille, that this proud Prince should pay his Respects to him. But his Affairs were not a jot bettered by it.

But Necessity obliges him to it.

Whilst the Duke of Bedford was in England, the Earl of Warwick who commanded in France, did all that lay in his Power to keep the Affairs of the English in a good Posture. He found himself at first too weak to oppose the Constable's entering Normandy. But upon News that the British Army had disbanded themselves because there was no Money to pay them, he thought himself able to make some Attempt. With a Body of five Thousand Men he entered Maine, and retook several Castles which the Bretons had seized. The surprizing of Places was then so frequent, that sometimes the same Town changed Sides twice or thrice in one Year. But there would be no End if one should give an Account of every Particular. The Earl of Warwick seeing that the Constable's Defeat before St. James's, the Desertion of his Troops, and the Broils in Charles's Court, disabled the French from having an Army in the Field, formed a Design to become Master of Montargis. This Place was necessary for the Execution of the Scheme which the Regent had laid, of carrying the War beyond the Loire. Indeed the English General could not expect to carry Montargis by a Siege in Form with the few Troops he had. But he was in Hopes that the Place being closely blocked up, would be forced to surrender before it could be relieved. The River Loire parting into three Branches near this Town, there was a Necessity to divide the Troops into three Quarters, the main of which the Earl of Warwick commanded himself. The second was intrusted with the Earl of Suffolk, and the Third with John de la Pole his Brother. These several Quartets were joined by Bridges of Communication; and in this Posture the English

Defeat of the English at the Blockade of Montargis.

patiently

1426. patiently waited till Hunger should constrain the Besieged to capitulate.

The Blockade had now lasted three Months, and King Charles had taken no care about relieving the Place. At length, the Besieged having sent him Word that they could hold out no longer if they were not succoured, he cast his Eyes on the Constable to undertake this Affair. But Richmond, who had no Army, refused to meddle with it, being unwilling with Troops just drawn together to expose himself to a Disgrace like that he received at St. James's. Upon his Refusal, the Management of this Expedition was committed to the Bastard of Orleans, who was come back from Avignon, where he had retired with Loivet his Father-in-law. This young Lord, though then but Twenty-two Years of Age, had already made eight Campaigns, and upon several Occasions had given signal Proofs of his Conduct and Courage. He must needs have been a young Man to take such an Enterprize upon him, with only sixteen Hundred Men, against the Earl of Warwick, whose Reputation was equal to that of the greatest Generals.

The Besieged having notice that they were preparing to relieve them, let go their Sluices, and by that Means the Lois overflowed the Bridges of Communication. The Bastard of Orleans arriving just in the Nick of Time, thought as he could never have a better Opportunity, he should not defer a Moment to attack the Enemy before the Waters should fall. He gave half of his Troops to La Hire to attack Pole's Quarters, and with the other Half he fell upon the Earl of Suffolk. It was an odd sort of Battle, the Soldiers on both Sides standing up to their Middle in Water. At last after a long Resistance, the two Quarters attacked were broke through, with the Loss of fifteen Hundred Men on the Side of the English, many of which were drowned in endeavouring to get over into the Earl of Warwick's Quarters, by Reason the Bridges were under Water. Warwick finding it impossible to assist his People, chose to retreat in good Order. This Action gained the Bastard of Orleans a great Reputation, being from that Time looked upon as one that would one Day become a famous General.

Ever since the latter End of the last Year, the Dukes of Burgundy and Gloucester were preparing for their single Combat, which in all Appearance had been put off by common Consent, seeing it was not fought at the Time appointed, namely, on St. George's Day. Though it should seem that these two Princes had nothing more to do, and that the Decision of the Affair of Hainault was to depend on the Issue of their Combat, yet the Duke of Burgundy did not think himself obliged to confound his Personal Quarrel with the Hainault Affairs of the Duke of Brabant, or to neglect the Advantages which the Truce gave him to put that Prince in Possession again of his Wife's Dominions. He no sooner saw the Duke of Gloucester out of Hainault, but he began by secret Emissaries, to cabal among the chief Men of the Country, to get them to deliver up Jaqueline who continued at Mons. The Countess her Mother, ever a Friend to the House of Burgundy, came into the Plot, though she took Care to conceal it from her Daughter. When Matters were ripe, on a sudden the Towns of Hainault declared for the Duke of Brabant; and the Earl of St. Paul his Brother appeared before Mons with any Army. Then the Magistrates of the City, pretending to be frightened by these Troops, and giving to understand that they could not alone bear the Brunt of the War, entered into Treaty with him. As all Things had been settled in private, they promised to deliver up Jaqueline to the Duke of Burgundy, till the Pope should decide the Point in Question. All this was transacted without the Knowledge of Jaqueline, who heard nothing of it till it was too late to keep it. She writ to the Duke of Gloucester, complaining that she had been basely betrayed: But her Complaints were to no Purpose. On the 13th of June 1426 she was forced to go from Mons, under the Conduct of the Prince of Orange, who guarded her as far as Gant, where she was to make her Abode. After that, all Hainault unanimously received the Duke of Brabant for Sovereign.

1426.
Continuation of the Affair of Hainault.

Monstrelet

Jaqueline given up to the Duke of Burgundy.

Jaqueline was at her Wit's End to see herself thus a Prisoner. But perceiving that Resistance would but make Matters worse, she made as if she were pleased that her Af-1426.

She makes her Escape and gets to Holland.

fair was left to the Pope's Determination. Her Dissimulation procured her a mild and honourable Treatment, of which she knew how to make a good use. In September she found Means to escape in Man's Cloaths, and retire into Holland. She was well received by some of her Subjects, whilst others chose rather to stick to the Duke of Burgundy, being sensible that it would be a hard Matter to stand by her against so potent an Enemy. The Duke very much vexed that his Prey had thus taken Wing, carried the War into Holland, to the End he might hinder her from fortifying herself in that Country. This War, which has nothing to do with our History, lasted the whole Year 1427 and Part of 1428. I shall relate the Issue of it hereafter, and in the mean Time must return to what was doing in France.

1427.
Weakness of both Parties in France.

The Earl of Warwick's Loss before Montargis, and the great Number of Garrisons which it was necessary to keep, prevented his keeping the Field. Besides the Duke of Bedford had ordered him to husband his Troops against an important Expedition which it was not proper yet to discover. All this while Charles was in no better Condition. The Advantage his Troops had lately gained, had not augmented his Forces. Thus both Sides were forced to stand still, or at least to content themselves with attempting to surprize some Towns.

The Duke of Suffolk is surprized in Mans, and relieved by Talbot.

In the Beginning of this Year the Earl of Foix, who had at length espoused the Side of King Charles, sent him a Body of Troops under the Command of the Earl of Orval of the House of Albret. This General having approached Mans, where the Earl of Suffolk was with a few Soldiers, held Intelligence with some of the Burghers, who promised to deliver up the City. Accordingly he was let in, and the Earl of Suffolk found himself constrained to retreat into the Castle, where he had but three Days Provisions. In this Extremity he sent to Talbot who was at Alençon, desiring him to use his Endeavours to relieve him. Talbot lost not a Moment. By the next Night, he was with some Troops at the Foot of the Castle, towards the Country, and entered at a Postern-Gate, whilst d'Orval val thought himself safe in the City, never imagining that the Besieged could be so soon relieved. At Break of Day, Suffolk and Talbot sallied out of the Castle, and taking the French unprepared, drove them before them quite out of the City. Thus the Place was almost as soon recovered as lost, by the extraordinary Dilligence of Talbot one of the bravest and most experienced Leaders of the Age.

After this Expedition, the two Generals marched to Laval a little Town in Maine, and carried it with ease. Then having joined the Earl of Warwick who was marching towards these Parts, they altogether besieged Pontorson, which the Constable Richmond had taken last Year. As this Siege lasted a pretty while, I shall leave the Generals there, in order to relate what passed elsewhere.

Suffolk and Talbot take Laval.

The Duke of Bedford was returned from England in the Beginning of this Year, according to the English Writers, or some Months sooner if we may believe the French, with a Reinforcement which rendered him formidable. The Bishop of Winchester was come along with him, and had received at Calais the Cardinal's Cap, which was given with great Ceremony. It appears by several Pieces in the Collection of Publick Acts, that he was generally stiled the Cardinal of England, doubtless on account of his being of the Royal Family. And yet the English Authors seem to have been ignorant of this Circumstance, since they always call him only the Cardinal of Winchester. I shall give him the same Title for the future, in Conformity to other Historians, who mention him only by that Name. Shortly after the Bishop was made the Pope's Legate for England, and by that Means had an Opportunity to increase his Riches and Credit, to the great Prejudice of the Duke of Gloucester his Enemy.

The Duke of Bedford returns to France.

The Bishop of Winchester made a Cardinal.

The Siege of Pontorson was still carrying on, without King Charles's being able to succour that Town. He had then Affairs of much greater Moment upon his Hands, and which touched him more nearly. The Constable Richmond was withdrawn to Vannes in Bretagne, extremely disgusted at the King's daily Coldness to him. Since his receiving the Constable's Sword, he had done nothing to answer

Richmond withdraws from Court.

1427.

La Tri-monille the only Favourite.

A League against him.

A Civil War upon his Account, ended by the Duke of Alençon.

swer the mighty Matters he had made the World expect from his Valour and Abilities. On the contrary, instead of having set the King upon a better Foot, he had rendered the Royal Authority so contemptible, by his proud and violent Doings, that Charles was, as one may say, less a King than he was before. The Princes and Great Men at Court copied after his Example, and took upon them to give Law to their Sovereign. Since the Death of Beaulieu, la Trimonille was the sole Favourite, and had so great an Ascendent over the King, that nothing was done but by his Directions. The Constable imagined at first he should be a Gainer by this Change, because the new Favourite had always professed great Friendship for him. But he was quickly convinced of the contrary. The ill Treatment the former Ministers had received at his Hands, made this apprehensive of being served in the same Manner, and therefore he omitted nothing that might help to foment the King's Aversion for him. The whole Court quickly perceived it, and were extremely concerned at it. The Great Men could have no Prospect of Preferments unless the King's Affairs were in a good Situation, and they were persuaded that the Constable alone was capable of restoring them. For this and several other Reasons, la Trimonille grew exceeding odious. Their Hatred was carried to that Height, that at last a Confederacy was formed against him, of which the Earl of Clermont and the Earl of March his Cousin were the Heads. They began with an Attempt upon his Life, after the Example of Richmond. Having notice that the King was gone to Loches, and had left la Trimonille at Bourges, they drew some Troops together, and marched thither in order to seize the Favourite. But they found he was already gone after the King. However not to lose their Labour entirely, they resolved to carry away La Borde and De Prie, two of his Creatures, who were retired into the Great Tower. De Prie was killed in defending himself, but La Borde held out till the King himself came to relieve him. This Affair turned to a downright Civil War, which after it had lasted some Months, was at length ended by the Mediation of the Duke of Alençon. This young young Prince, who had been taken Prisoner at the Battle of Verneuil, was just released by the Intercession of the Duke of Burgundy, who, though an Enemy of King Charles, sought all Occasions to gain the Friendship of the French Princes. But it had cost the Duke of Alençon two Hundred Thousand Crowns, a very considerable Sum at all Times, but especially at the Time we are speaking of. To procure this Money, he was forced to put off his Jewels, and sell the Duke of Bretagne the Town of Fongeres, at a very low Rate. In return for the Service he had just done the King, Charles made him a Present of fourscore Thousand Crowns, though he himself was in great Want. Meant while la Trimouille still kept his Post at Court.

Whilst Charles was taken up with quelling his Domestic Enemies, the Duke of Bedford was intent upon executing a Design which he had formed before he left England. And that was to reduce the Duke of Bretagne to the Obedience of King Henry. Ever since June he had caused Pontorson to be besieged, a strong Town lying upon the Borders of Bretagne, which might have been a great Obstacle to his entering that Dukedom, if it had continued in the Hands of the French. This Siege, which had lasted a good while, being over, the Duke of Bedford repaired to the Army, with a Reinforcement which made it Twenty Thousand strong. With this powerful Body, against which he knew his Enemies had nothing like it to oppose, he prepared to enter Bretagne, threatening the Country with utter Destruction. Whether the Duke of Bretagne was taken unawares, or whether he was glad to have an Excuse to quit King Charles's Side, which he had not espoused but purely out of Condescension to the Constable his Brother, he wisely prevented the impendent Danger. He was very sensible that Charles was not in a Condition to protect him. Besides, he was displeased with him on the Constable's Score. Upon these Accounts, he sent Ambassadors to the Duke of Bedford to sue for Peace upon what Terms he pleased.

The Duke of Bedford marches against the Duke of Bretagne.

He obliges him to abandon King Charles.

Though

1427.

Act. Pub.
X. 378.

Though the Regent had it in his Power to be revenged of the Duke of Bretagne, he thought it his Duty to prefer the Interests of the King his Nephew to the gratifying his Passion. The Truth is, it was much better for the King to make of the Duke of Bretagne a willing Friend, by treating him civilly, than a private Enemy by using him rigorously. So that he required nothing more of him than to swear to the Peace of Treve, and cause all his States to do the same, pursuant to the Engagement he had already entered into with Henry V. and that he should promise with an Oath to do Homage to young Henry when called upon. These easy Terms had a very good Effect upon the Duke of Bretagne, who ever after proved a Friend to the English, even whilst their Affairs were upon the decline. On the other Hand, though the Regent plainly perceived he could expect no great Matters from the Duke of Bretagne, by Reason of the Influence the Constable his Brother had over him, yet he thought the bringing off that Prince from Charles's Party, was a very good Thing for the English.

Continuation and End of the Affair of Hai-nault.

I left the Duke of Burgundy at War with Jaqueline in Holland, under the specious Pretence of defending the Honour and Interest of the Duke of Brabant his Cousin, though in reality it was only for his own private Views, as will appear hereafter. This War, as may be imagined, did not turn much to Jaqueline's Advantage. There was too great a Disproportion between the two Parties. The Duke of Gloucester was not able of himself to give his Dutches the Assistance she stood in need of. In order to that it was necessary either to employ the Publick Revenues of England, or procure an extraordinary Subsidy of the Parliament. But it was no easy Matter to obtain this, at a Time when the War in France was a great Charge to the Nation. However in the Parliament which was held this Year, the Duke had Interest enough to get a small Aid. It appears by the Collection of Publick Acts that the Parliament petitioned the King to assign the Duke of Gloucester the Sum of five Thousand Marks out of the Subsidy granted him, that he might assist his Dutches. To this Sum the King advanced five Thousand Marks upon the Salary annexed annexed to the Protectorship. With this Aid the Duke sent a Reinforcement of some English Troops, under the Command of Silvartier *. But these Troops being defeated by the Duke of Burgundy just after their Landing, Faquelina found herself reduced to a wretched Pass. In fine, by the Intercession of the Duke of Bedford she obtained a Truce, during which the Duke of Gloucester was brought to consent, that the Affair should be decided by the Pope. It must be observed, that the Duke of Bedford had already broke off the single Combat between the Dukes of Burgundy and Gloucester. Some Time after the Pope published his Sentence, whereby he annulled Faquelina's Marriage with the Duke of Gloucester, and confirmed her first Marriage with the Duke of Brabant, who survived but a few Months this Determination, and was succeeded by the Earl of St. Paul his Brother. By the Death of the Duke her Husband, Faquelina ought to have had peaceable Possession of her Dominions. But the Duke of Burgundy discovered on this Occasion, that the late Duke of Brabant's Interest was not the Thing that had set him so eagerly at work. He ordered Matters so, that Faquelina's Subjects refused to receive her, and he made himself Mediator between them. The sharing of the Lion in the Fable was literally put in Practice in this Accommodation. The Duke obliged Faquelina to commit to him the Government of her Dominions, to appoint him her Heir, and tye herself up from ever marrying again.

Duke of Brabant dies.

The Duke of Burgundy secures Faquelina's Inheritance,

All the Historians generally fix these Occurrences to the Year 1427. And yet it appears by a Piece in the Collection of Publick Acts, that this Affair was not ended May the 8th. 1428. At least the Duke of Gloucester and Faquelina had not yet acquiesced to the Pope's Sentence, since in that Act, Henry VI speaking of this Princess, calls her, Faquette Dutcheis of Gloucester and Holland, his well-beloved Aunt. In all Appearance the Death of the Duke of Brabant had put them in hopes they should be able to get their Marriage confirmed, or obtain a Dispensation to marry

* Baker says, the Lord Fitz-Walter.

1427. again. It was likewise on this Account doubtless, that the Duke of Burgundy exacted from Faquelina the Conditions before-mentioned, that he might take from the Duke of Gloucester all Prospect of ever setting Foot again in the Low Countries. Be this as it will, the Duke of Gloucester, pressed by the Duke his Brother and the Council, who plainly saw how prejudicial to the King's Affairs his Obstinacy would be, dropped his Pretensions. He relinquished Faquelina, and shortly after married Eleanor Cobham * whom he long kept as his Mistress. Thus ended the Quarrel which had proved so fatal to England.

Duke of Gloucester quits Ja-quelina, and marries Eleanor Cobham.

Continuation of Jaque-lina's Affairs.

Though the English no longer concerned themselves with the Affairs of Faquelina, it will not however be amiss to relate the Issue in a few Words, and show at the same Time, how the House of Burgundy rose to great Power. This Princess, in spite of her extorted Engagement, married afterwards one Borsel a Zelander, the which obliged the Duke of Burgundy to make War upon them. Borsel being made Prisoner, Faquelina was fain in order to free him, to agree that the Children which she should have by her late Marriage should be incapable of inheriting her Dominions, and that she should give up all her Strong-Holds to the Duke of Burgundy. She lived ten Years longer, and after her Death, the Duke of Burgundy was acknowledged for Earl of Hainault, Holland, Zeland, and Lord of Frise-land. Before Faquelina's Death, he had taken Possession of the Earldoms of Zurphen and Namur, which he had purchased on Condition not to enjoy them till after the Decease of the Earl of Namur, which happened in 1428. In 1430 he inherited the Dutchies of Brabant, Lothier, Limbourg, and the Marquisate of Anvers by the Death of Philip Duke of Brabant his Cousin, who left no Issue. All these Dominions joined to Flanders, Artois, the two Burgundies, and the Towns lying on the Somme, which he held of the King of England, set him upon a Level with the Crown'd Heads. Let us return now to the War in France.

The

* Daughter to Reginald Lord Cobham of Sterborough. Dugdale.

The Engliſh had ſtill much the Odds of King Charles.
 Though the Buſineſs of Hainault had put their Affairs a little out of Order, they were however, maugre that Diverſion, in ſo flourishing a Condition, as ſeemed to promiſe certain Succeſs. The Duke of Bretagne no longer gave them any Uneaſineſs. The Earl of Richmond his Brother was at Variance with King Charles, without any Appearance of their ever being Friends again. The Duke of Burgundy, clear of the Holland War, could for the future powerfully aſſiſt his Allies. In fine, beſides the num-berleſs Garrifons they had in the Kingdom, the Regent had on Foot a Body of twenty Thouſand Men, and expected a ſtrong Reinforcement which the Earl of Salisbury was to bring him from England.

1428.
 Superiority of Engliſh in France.

On the other Hand, King Charles was without Allies, and upon his laſt Legs. It is true, that in order to obtain Succours from Scotland, he had put on Foot a Treaty of Marriage between the Dauphin his Son, and Margaret Daughter of King James, though they were both Children. But this was a diſtant Proſpect. Beſides the King of Scotland had made no Step which might diſcover that he was inclined to break the Truce with the Engliſh. Thus Charles ſeeing no manner of likelihood of being able to ſtand upon his Defence, ſeemed to have entirely given over all Care of preventing the Deſigns of his Enemies. He lived on in a ſurprizing Indolence, without loſing any of his uſual Diversions.

The ill State of King
 Charles.

The Conſideration of the Poſture the Affairs of the two Nations were in, made the Duke of Bedford conclude, that the War would ſoon be at an End, and that two or three Campaigns would infallibly drive Charles out of the Kingdom. He reſolved therefore to exert his utmoſt, whiſt ſo fair an Opportunity offered. But as he had a great many Troops, it was neceſſary in the firſt Place to provide for their Subſiſtence. With this View he held an Aſſembly of the chief Men at Paris, to whom he propoſed the re-aſſuming all the Grants made to the Church for forty Years laſt paſt. But he met with ſo ſtrong Oppoſition from the Clergy, that not to alienate the Affections of ſo

Assembly of the chief Men at Paris.

1428. powerful a Body, he was fain to desist, and obliged to make use of other Means for the Maintenance of his Army.

The Earl of Warwick made Governour to the King.
Act. Pub.
X. 399.

Before he set about the Execution of his Projects, he lost the Assistance of the brave Earl of Warwick, who returned to England, being appointed Governour to the King. He was designed for this Place immediately after the Death of the Duke of Exeter in 1426. But as his Presence was necessary in France, his Patent was not drawn up till June the 1st this Year. Apparently they had a Mind to stay till the Earl of Salisbury who was to lead a strong Reinforcement to the Duke of Bedford should be ready to set out.

The Earl of Salisbury arrives with 5000
Men.

ibid.
p. 392.

The Regent's Design.

The Earl of Salisbury arrived in France in July, with a Body of about five Thousand Men which he had raised at his own Charge, pursuant to certain Articles entered into with the Council. Upon his coming to Paris, the Regent conferred on him the Command of an Army of sixteen Thousand Men. These were more than enough to be Master of the Field, King Charles not being able to set on Foot a Body of Troops like that. The Regent's Design was to drive Charles beyond the Loire, well knowing that when once that Prince was at a Distance, all the Towns he still kept on this Side the River would surrender of Course for want of Succours. To this End, there was a Necessity of taking from him the Places which served to keep up the Communication with the northern Provinces, that all hopes of returning might be cut off.

Salisbury marches towards the Loire.

It was with this View that the Earl of Salisbury, in Company with the Earl of Suffolk, Talbot, Falstaff, and several other famous Leaders, marched towards the Loire in the Beginning of August. Orleans was the most important Place in those Parts. It belonged to the Duke of Orleans, who was Prisoner in England since the Battle of Azincourt. I have already taken notice that the pretended Treaty made between Henry V and the Duke of Orleans about the neutrality of this City, is a mere Fiction. It was invented purely to render the Siege of Orleans odious to the World, and to make it believed that Heaven was pleased to interpose in Favour of France, and punish the pretended Breach of of Faith in the English. Be this as it will, the Earl of Salisbury having held a great Council of War, it was resolved to besiege Orleans. It appears by a Piece in the Collection of Publick Acts, that this Resolution was taken without the Duke of Bedford's Knowledge, and contrary to his Opinion. To succeed in this Undertaking, the neighbouring Places which might annoy the Besiegers, were first to be secured. The doing this took up the Months of August and September. During that Space the English became Masters of Jenville, Mehun, Baugenay, Gergean, Clery, Subly, and some other small Towns, and at length they appeared before Orleans on the 12th of October.

1428.
The Siege of Orleans
resolved.
Act. Pub.
X. 480.

The French easily perceived by all the Proceedings of the English General that he had a Design to lay Siege to Orleans. Accordingly, whilst he was employed elsewhere, they had sent thither both Men and Ammunition. Ganconr, a Creature of the Duke of Orleans, commanded there, though he was still a Prisoner of the English, who had only released him upon his Parole, in order to afford him Means to provide his Ransom. He had even been recalled ever since June. The Bastard of Orleans, d'Orval, La Hire, Xaintrailles, Thouars, Bouffac, Chabannes, La Fayette, Granville, and several other Officers of Note, had thrown themselves into the City, on purpose to acquire Reputation in the Service of their Sovereign.

The French
lay in Stores.
Act. Pub.
X. 402.

The English Army not being numerous enough to invest the City on all Sides, the Besiegers received Succours in the very Beginning of the Siege. But the Earl of Salisbury, who looked on this Enterprize as a decisive Blow for the King his Master and his own Reputation, omitted nothing to deprive the Besieged of this Advantage. He caused to be run up round the City sixty Forts or Redoubts, called then Bastilles. How great soever this Work might be, nothing could divert him from it, seeing the Success of the Siege entirely depended upon it. In vain would he have pushed his Attacks, if the Enemies had been able to let in continually fresh Succours. Besides, the Season which was very far advanced, made him very sensible he

The Besiegers raise Forts about the City to prevent Succours.

1428.

he should be forced to pass the Winter in the Camp, and that during that Time he should be liable to many Insults.

Among the sixty Forts, there were six much stronger than the rest upon the six principal Avenues of the City. Before these Forts were built, the French could with ease throw Succours into the Place, and had done so very often. But afterwards, it was not without extreme Difficulty that they could now and then give some Assistance to the Besieged. Upon these six great Redoubts the General erected Batteries which thundered against the Walls. But as the Ordnance was not then brought to the Perfection it is in at present, it must not be imagined that the Canons did the Execution they do in our Time.

It would be too long to relate all the Particulars of this Siege, the Attacks, Sallies, and daily Skirmishes either to get in or drive back the Convoys. One may easily judge; that one of the strongest Places of France, defended by a numerous Garrison, under the Conduct of some of the bravest and most experienced general Officers then in France, and assaulted by Englishmen, who were deemed the most undaunted Warriors in the World, furnished the Besiegers and Besieged with frequent Occasions to exercise their Valour.

Charles comes to Chinon.

Charles plainly saw that the taking of Orleans would deprive him of the Advantage he had hitherto had of keeping up the War in the Northern Provinces of the Kingdom. But as he found himself without Men and Money, he was in no Condition to raise the Siege. However, he drew near it and came to Chinon, where he convened the chief Men, and obtained an Aid of Money. Whilst he was in this Place, the Constable Richmond made him an offer of his Service. But in what Distress soever he might be, and how great Need soever he stood in of a speedy Assistance, he could not bring himself to pardon him.

The English become Masters of the Bulwark.

Mean while, the Siege was carried on with a great deal of Vigour. The Bulwark of the Tournelles * being very much shaken by the Besiegers Cannon, and the Besieged having

* The Place where the Parliament sits to hear criminal Causes.

having thought proper to set it on fire, the English extinguished the Flames, and lodged themselves in that Post.

1418.

At the same time they became Masters of the Tower on the Bridge, from whence they could overlook the whole City.

and of the Tower on the Bridge.

The taking this Tower proved fatal to the Earl of Salisbury.

One Day, as he was looking out of a Window, a Cannon-shot from the City hit him as it passed on the right Side of his Head, carried off his Cheek, and struck out one of his Eyes. He died a few Days after at Melun,

*The Earl of Salisbury
slain.*

whither he had been removed *. This Loss, though very great to the English, interrupted not the Siege a Moment.

The Earl of Suffolk having taken the Command of the Army, continued the Attacks as vigorously as before, assisted by Talbot one of the bravest and most experienced Captains of his Age.

There was nothing every Day but Assaults, Sallies, continual Skirmishes; wherein the Besieged behaved with equal Bravery and Conduct. In spite of the Precautions the English had used to prevent Succours from being thrown into the City, Troops and Convoys got in however from time to time, though it was always by dint of Sword. Thus the Garrison which at first consisted but of Twelve Hundred Men, was become Three Thousand strong by the latter End of December. On the other Hand, the Army of the Besiegers was increased to Three and Twenty Thousand by the Supplies the Regent never ceased sending. So that the Siege daily grew more important and difficult.

The Garrison and Army both increased during the Siege.

The English had now been four Months before Orleans, and no one was yet able to judge what the Issue would be.

1419.
The Battle of Herrings.

The Regent, who began to be uneasy at the length of the Siege, was confirmed more and more in his Opinion that they had undertaken it too rashly. However, to omit nothing that lay in his Power, he sent from Paris a Convoy of Salt-Fish, the Lent-Season of the Year 1429 being come. He left

* Thomas Montacute Earl of Salisbury, died November 3. without Issue-Male, leaving only one Daughter, who was married to Richard Nevil, Son of the Earl of Westmoreland, who upon Montacute's Death was styled Earl of Salisbury. His Widow was married afterwards to the Earl of Suffolk. Dugdale.

1429. left the Conduct of it to Falstaff, one of the bravest and most able Generals the English then had, and gave him a Guard of Seventeen Hundred Men. Charles having notice of the Day the Convoy was to set out from Paris, resolved to way-lay it. He commissioned the Earl of Clermont to this Purpose, who at the Head of Three Thousand Men attacked the Convoy on the Road to Orleans, February the 12th, at Seven a-Clock in the Morning. Falstaff having had Intelligence of the Approach of the French, had made an Intrenchment with his Carriages, behind which he had taken shelter in order to withstand their first Charge, the which was indeed very vigorous; but the English bore it with such Resolution, that far from being broken by the first Shock, they put their Enemies into extreme Disorder, by the great Slaughter they made of them. As soon as Falstaff saw the Confusion they were in, he ordered the Carriages to be removed which surrounded his People; and falling upon the French Troops already disheartned, he entirely routed them with great Slaughter. Sixscore Lords or Officers of Note fell that Day, besides abundance of Common Soldiers. The Bastard of Orleans, who had sallied out to assist the Earl of Clermont in defeating the Convoy, having preserved a Presence of Mind in this Rout, found Means to re-enter the City with four Hundred Men. This Action was called The Battle of Herrings.

Offer of surrendering Orleans to the Duke of Burgundy.

King Charles was extremely cast down upon News of this Defeat. He saw himself upon the Point of losing Orleans, and was sensible of the Consequences of the Loss. The Thoughts of seeing the English ravage the Provinces beyond the Loire, and by that Means disable him from continuing the War, could not but trouble him exceedingly. This Misfortune would infallibly follow upon their being Masters of Orleans. In this Distress he bethought himself of an Expedient, which he imagined would rob them of this Advantage, not questioning but they would be so blind as not to see through his Artifice. This was to send to the commanding Officer a Power to deliver the Place into the Hands of the Duke of Burgundy, for him to keep in Trust Trust till the War was at an End. Xaintrailles and others, ^{1429.} who were appointed to treat of this Affair, being come to Paris, made the Duke of Bedford the Offer, who laughed ^{It is re-} at the Stratagem. He plainly told them, they were very ^{jected.} much mistaken if they took him for a Man to beat the Bush for another to run away with the Game. Some say, the Duke of Burgundy was extremely nettled at this Reply, and even withdrew his Troops from the Siege. But this is a mere Invention. The Duke of Burgundy had no reason to complain that the Regent should refuse to deliver a Place of that Importance to him; on purpose to humour his Enemies. Besides, we shall see presently, that the Regent was all along very well satisfied with the Duke of Burgundy both during the Siege and after.

Charles not being able to succeed in his Project, and seeing no other way to save Orleans, began to think of retreating into Dauphiné, when a very extraordinary Accident gave a sudden Turn to the Affairs of the two contending Nations. We are about to see the strangest and most unexpected Revolution that ever was mentioned in History. The French from vanquished, are going to be on a sudden victorious; and the English, who had been hitherto deemed invincible, are going to be every where worsted, and at length driven out of the Kingdom. And what is more surprizing in this Turn, is the Instrument by which it was brought about. But before I enter upon Particulars, I must warn the Reader, that in what I am going to relate concerning this strange Event, I follow the French Authors, without however warranting the Truth of every Thing they have advanced.

Charles thinks of retiring into Dauphiné.

A strange Accident changes the Face of Af-airs.

About the End of February 1429, a Country Girl, ^{An Ac-} called Joan of Arc, a Village in Danremy in Lorraine, ^{count of the} came to Robert de Bandricourt, Governour of Vaucouleurs, ^{Maid of Or-} and told him she had received exprels Orders from God ^{leans.} to go and raise the Siege of Orleans, and to crown King Charles at Rheims. Bandricourt thought the Girl at first was mad; but finding that she talked very sensibly in other Matters, he thought fit to send her to the King, who was still at Chinon. Charles being informed that Joan of Arc

1429. was coming to him, declared that one Maria d'Avignon a Nun, had formerly told him, that Heaven would arm one of her Sex in Defence of France. He added, that perhaps the Girl which was coming was the Person Heaven had made choice of. This was even enough to satisfy the Court before-hand, that Joan of Arc's Calling was miraculous. This supernatural Mission squared also exactly with the Sentiments of the Queen, of Agnes Sorrel the King's Mistress, and of the principal Courtiers, who laboured all they could to divert the King from his Purpose to retire into Dauphiné. So that nothing could be more apt to cause him to alter his Mind than the Prospect of a lucky Turn. Be this as it will, thus prepossessed, they expected the coming of Joan of Arc. The first Time she appeared at Court, she addressed her self directly to the King, finding him out amidst a Crowd of Courtiers, though she had never seen him, and though he had taken care to have nothing about him that might distinguish him from the rest: However, he seemed at first to make no great Account of her. But as she earnestly pressed him to give Credit to her Words, which were the same she had said to Bandricourt, he resolved to have her examined. The Doctors in Divinity, who were her Examiners, declared, upon what Ground I know not, that her Mission was divine. Then she was sent to the Parliament of Poitiers, who were of the same Opinion. Lastly, to confirm this Belief, the King gave out that she had told him Secrets which no mortal knew but himself.

Every body being thus prepossessed that Joan of Arc, commonly called la Pucelle [or the Maid] was sent from God to save France, she was looked upon by all with Eyes of Admiration. All her Actions, Words and Gestures were construed to her Advantage. They perceived in her a fine Genius, solid Judgment, Greatness of Soul, and a Knowledge very unusual in one of her Sex and Condition. This was the common Effect of Prejudice. Thus far there is nothing that should seem very strange. It is easy to conceive, that it might be a Contrivance to give new Life to the French, and perhaps to the King himself, dismayed at so many Losses, and beholding the Kingdom just going to fall under the Dominion of Foreigners. But that this Trick, if it be one, should succeed according to the Design of the Authors, is what may indeed be just Ground of Admiration, and afford ample Matter for Moral and Political Reflections.

Mean while, the Siege of Orleans going on vigorously, Charles resolved to try to throw a Convoy into the City. La Pucelle having desired to be one of the Company, and to have Arms and a Man's Habit, easily obtained her Request. To render herself more remarkable, she would have a certain Sword which she sent for from the Tomb of a Knight buried in the Church of St. Catharine's of Fierbois. The Convoy designed for Orleans sat out April the 25th. Several French Writers affirm, that La Pucelle commanded the Guard, and that it was she that conducted the Convoy into the City: but Monstrelet, a cotemporary Author, says the contrary. The Convoy being arrived on the 29th in the Morning, near the Burgundian Gate, the Bastard of Orleans made a Sally to favour their Passage. A fierce and bloody Battle ensued, wherein after a long Resistance the English were worsted, and forced to let the Convoy go in. Joan made her Entry into Orleans, surrounded with the Generals, and amidst the Acclamations of the People, who ascribed to her the good Success of that Day.

Joan marches with a Convoy to Orleans.

Joan enters Orleans in Triumph.

On the 4th of May, La Pucelle at the Head of a Detachment of the Garrison, attacked Sword in Hand the Fort of St. Loa, one of the six largest Redoubts before-mentioned. After a Conflict of four Hours, the Fort was carried, and of the Twelve Hundred English who defended it, Four Hundred were killed on the Spot. Two Days after, she assaulted likewise the Fort of St. John; but as the English had almost quitted it, she met but with little Resistance. Presently after, without giving her Troops any Respite, she led them against the Fort called London, the most considerable of the Six, built upon the Ruins of the Church of the Augustines. The gallant Resistance of the English hindered not this also from being taken, with great Loss on their Side. La Pucelle's Troops thought of resting themselves after so hard Duty; but immediately she

She takes four of the Besiegers Forts.

1429. marched them up to the Fort of the Tournelles. But as she could not attack it that Evening, for want of Day-light. She kept it invested all the Night. In the Morning at Break of Day the Assault began, and held fourteen Hours without Intermission. The French were beat back four several Times, and as often did they renew the Charge, La Pucelle animating them by her Words and Actions, though she was wounded with an Arrow between the Neck and Shoulders. At length, about eight a Clock at Night, the Fort was carried like the rest, and six Hundred English cut in Pieces. In all these Actions La Pucelle showed a Valour and Resolution very uncommon in Persons of her Sex.

The English raise the Siege.

One may easily guess what a Consternation the English were in, after the ill Success of that Day. The Loss of four of their largest Forts not permitting them to carry on the Siege any longer, they marched off May the 12th, after having sat down before the Place seven whole Months.

Here is a Fragment of a Letter from the Duke of Bedford to the King his Nephew, after the raising of the Siege of Orleans, which plainly shows how much the English and the Duke of Bedford himself were disheartened at this unexpected Event.

Every Thing was prosperous here on your Side till the Siege of Orleans, undertaken by God knows what Counsels. After the Death of my Cousin of Salisbury, God rest his Soul, who it seems is cut off by the Hand of God, your Troops who were very numerous at this Siege, have received a terrible Blow. This has happened partly, as we verily believe, by the Confidence the Enemies have placed in a Hell-born Woman, a Limb of Satan, called, la Pucelle, who has made use of Incantments and Witchcraft. This Defeat has not only diminished your Troops, but withal has bereaved the rest of Courage in an astonishing manner. Moreover she has encouraged your Enemies to draw together without Delay in great Numbers — (a)

The

(a) This Fragment, which is without Date, is placed wrong in the Collection of Publick Acts, among the Records of the Year 1428.

The raising of the Siege of Orleans ushered in the decline of the Affairs of the English. From that Time the French and English seemed to have changed Tempers and Characters. The English were seized with a Spirit of Fear and Amazement, whilst the French were filled with Courage, which they had almost quite lost since the Battles of Azincourt and Vernuil. Though after the raising of the Siege, the French Army exceeded not six Thousand, yet were they not afraid to pursue and push briskly the English, who notwithstanding they were still superior in Number, retreated in a strange Disorder. Their Consternation was so great, that they knew not as one may say, what they did. Instead of keeping together in order to make Head against their Enemies, they minded nothing but throwing numerous Garrisons into the Places they had conquered before the Siege, about the Loire. By that means they weakened their Army to such a Degree, that they were no longer in a Condition to stand before their Enemies who were close at their Heels. As they dreaded a Battle, as much as they were wont to desire it. They retired at a good Distance, and gave the French Time to retake these Places one after another. The Earl of Suffolk was made Prisoner in Gergeau, where he had shut himself up, with four Hundred Men only, through an Indiscretion which could only proceed from his Consternation at the Defeat of his Troops. Of all the Places in those Parts Baugenci held out the longest; but could not help undergoing the same Fate with the rest. In fine, Disorder and Confusion had taken such hold of the English, that Charles by the Advice of La Pucelle, resolved to go and be crowned at Rheims. Mean Time this City was still in the Hands of the English. Besides, there was a Necessity of traversing above one Hundred and Twenty Miles of the Enemies Country, and of taking several Places, which at any other Time he would not have ventured to approach. Strange Effect of the Terror which a Woman had inspired the English with, and of the Boldness she had given their Enemies.

1420.

The great Alteration of the French and English.

The English retreat in Disorder.

Earl of Suffolk made Prisoner.

Charles resolves to be crowned at Rheims.

The 1429.

The Constable brings him Troops.

The Constable Richmond seeing the flourishing Condition of the King's Affairs, began to abate of his Haughtiness. Hitherto he had imagined they stood in need of him. But what had lately happened made him perceive that he might be entirely laid aside, and should lose his share of the Glory the King in all likelihood was going to acquire. In this Belief, he drew together all his Friends, and having formed a Body of twelve Hundred Horse, and twelve Thousand Foot, he set out in order to go and join the King who was before Baugenci. The Duke of Bretagne no doubt winked at the raising these Troops in his Country, the Turn which had lately happened, causing him to alter his Measures a little. Whilst the Constable was upon his March, La Trimouille, who did not desire his Company at Court, found Means to persuade the King that he was coming with a numerous Army, on purpose to have his Person in his Power. This made such an Impression on the King's Mind, that he was just going to quit the Siege of Baugenci in order to give the Constable Battle. But having been better informed, he was pleased to receive him with the Succours he brought. It was however upon very mortifying Terms to a Prince of his Temper. They required of him, that he should not pretend to govern the King, nor be present at the Coronation where La Trimouille did not Care to be outshone.

The Battle of Patay wherein the English are defeated,

Baugenci being taken, the King had Intelligence that the English were drawing together in Beauce. Whereupon Charles having called a Council of War, it was unanimously resolved to go and give them Battle. Indeed there was no likelihood of undertaking to march to Rheims, with their Enemies in their Rear. Charles's Army was then ten Thousand Strong *, including the Bretons which the Constable had brought. But of the Twenty-two Thousand English, which had been before Orleans, there were left but six Thousand with Talbot, who had taken the Command of the Army.

* Here must be some Mistake either in the Author or the Printer, since Rapin lays above, the Bretons alone were thirteen Thousand two Hundred.

Army. Upon the Earl of Suffolk being made Prisoner. 1429.
By the prodigious Amazement the English were under since the Affair of Orleans, they suffered themselves to be surprized near Patay by the French Army, which appeared in Sight before they knew any Thing of the Matter. They had scarce Time to draw up in Order of Battle. Which was done in such Hurry and Confusion that they made but a very faint Resistance. Talbot alone maintained the Fight and Talbot by his Valour and Conduct. But at length the General made Pri- being taken Prisoner, the English Army was put to Flight soner. with the Loss of two Thousand five Hundred Men. Falstaff suffered himself to be hurried along with the Run-a-ways, seized by one of those sudden Fits of Terror, which for the Time deprive a Man of the use of his Reason, and which may happen to Persons of the greatest Courage.

If the raising of the Siege of Orleans had given a great The Duke of Bedford shuts him- self up in Paris.
Check to the Affairs of the English, the Defeat at Patay was a no less stunning and fatal Blow to them. The Regent saw himself forced to keep within the Walls of Paris, being unable to appear in the Field in order to oppose the Progress of his Enemies. Mean while Charles improved these Advantages. Lewis III Duke of Anjou and King of Sicily The King of Sicily joins Charles.
his Brother-in-law, being returned from Naples where he had made a long stay, brought him just after the Battle of Patay a supply of several brave Officers who had attended him into Italy, and were come back with him to France.

As King Charles's Party encreased, as his Affairs became Charles marches to Rheims.
more prosperous, he took at Gien a Review of his Troops, and found they were augmented to fifteen Thousand Men. He gave the Command of Part of them to the Constable, to go and make a Diversion in Normandy, or rather on purpose to send him at a Distance under that honourable Pretence, that he might not assist at the Coronation according to Agreement. The Earl of Perdriac had another Part with orders to go and carry the War into Gnienne. These two Several Towns sur- render to him.
Detachments made together but five Thousand Men. With the remaining ten Thousand, Charles took the Road to Rheims, well knowing there was no Army in the Field to hinder him. In going through Burgundy he summoned

Auxerre

1429.

He enters Rheims, and is crowned.

Auxerre to surrender, which Place promised to follow the Example the principal Towns of Champagne should set her. Troye and Châlon surrendred upon the first Summons. A few Days after, the Inhabitants of Rheims drove the English Garrison out of the City, and sent Deputies to the King to present him with the Keys of their Gates. Thus every Thing succeeded according to his wish. Charles entered Rheims in Triumph, and was crowned presently after. The Ceremony being over, La Pucelle would have retired, affirming, she had nothing more to do, after having executed what God had commanded. But the King pressed her so earnestly, that at length he prevailed with her to stay.

The Duke of Gloucester mortifies the Cardinal of Winchester.

It is time now to see what was doing in England, during the fatal Revolution which had just happened in France. The Quarrel was still kept alive between the Duke of Gloucester and Bishop of Winchester, who was come back to London. As the Prelate's new Dignity rendered him more haughty than ever, the Duke of Gloucester made this same Dignity a Handle to give him a sad Mortification. St. George's Day, Patron of the most noble Order of the Garter, being at hand, the Cardinal was to officiate as Bishop of Winchester. But the Duke of Gloucester and his Friends opposed it, affirming, that he could not hold the Bishoprick of Winchester with a Cardinalship, without the King's express Licence. This Affair being brought before the Council, it was resolved, that for this time the Cardinal should not act as Bishop of Winchester, and two Lords were sent to give him notice of it. Next Day he came himself to the Board, and demanded upon what Ground they deprived him of his Right. He was told, that it was for fear of prejudicing the Privileges of the Crown, and the Council persisted in the Resolve of the Day before. Hence the Cardinal saw that his Adversary's Interests was still much greater than his.

Act. Pub.
X. 414.

The Cardinal is made General of a Crusado.

Shortly after, the Prelate received a Bull from the Pope, appointing him his Legate for Germany, and General of a Crusado against the Hereticks of Bohemia. The Pope's View was to draw a powerful Aid from England against the the Hussies *. It is even very likely, that as he was a great Friend to King Charles, his Design was to weaken England, by draining the Kingdom of Men and Money under Colour of the Crusado. Be this as it will, the Cardinal having received the Bull in the Beginning of June this Year, though it was dated March the 18th, 1427-8, presented to the King and Council a Petition, desiring Leave to publish the Crusado. He prayed likewise, that he might have Power to levy in England Five Hundred Lances, and Five Thousand Archers, and to appoint the Generals and Officers of this Army. His Petition having been examined in Council, it was resolved to grant it in Part under the following Restrictions :

He petitions to publish the Crusado.

Spond.
A&C. Pub.
X. 419.

P. 420.

That no Person should be obliged to contribute any Money towards the Crusado, but that every one should give what they pleased. That the Sums thus voluntarily furnished, should be put into such Hands as the Council should nominate. That the Gold or Silver should not be exported beyond Sea, but should be expended in the Kingdom.

That the Cardinal should be impowered to levy only Two Hundred and Fifty Lances, and Two Thousand Five Hundred Archers. That even this should not be granted but on Condition that the Pope should have some Regard for the King and Kingdom, and impose no Tax either on the Laity or Clergy.

That none of the Soldiers serving in France should be lifted or received among the Troops of the Crusado.

That the Cardinal should give the Council sufficient Security for the Return of these Troops.

That he should effectually use his Interest, to induce the King of Scotland to leave England in quiet, and keep the Truce.

That in publishing the Crusado, it should expressly be said that it was with the King's Consent.

* There will be a large Account of these People in the History of the Council of Basil in the State of the Church, at the End of the sixth Volume.

1429. That the Cardinal should nominate the Officers of the Troops, but that the King should commission them.

That it should be the same with regard to the Constable or Commander in chief of the Army.

That if the Crusado did not take Place, the Money furnished by private Persons should not be laid out without the King's Approbation.

New Levies for France. One may see by these Restrictions how careful the Council was to hinder the Pope from exercising in the Kingdom an Authority which his Predecessors had but too much abused.

The Cardinal is to serve in France till December. Mean while, the News of the Battle of Patay being brought to England, caused a great Consternation, and made it easily conjectured, that the Regent stood in need of a sudden and powerful Aid. And therefore, without losing a Moment, the Council decreed new Levies, the Command of which was designed for Sir John Ratcliffe. But as in the present Posture of Affairs in France, it would have been very imprudent to send Troops to Bohemia, the Council resolved to make some Alterations in what had been granted the Cardinal of Winchester. Upon this pressing Occasion they came to a new Agreement with him, whereby he engaged to serve in France, under the Duke of Bedford, till the End of December, with the Troops of the Crusado, provided they were not employed in any Siege.

The Duke of Bedford's Instructions to Garter. A few Days after arrived from France, *Garter King at Arms, with Instructions from the Regent to inform the Council

* There are three Kings at Arms in England, namely, Garter, Clarencieux, and Norroy. Garter is the principal, instituted by Henry V. His Business is to attend Knights of the Garter at their Solemnity, and to marshal the Funerals of the Greater Nobility. Clarencieux was created by Edward IV. who upon attaining the Dukedom of Clarence by the Death of his Brother, made the Herald belonging to the Duke of Clarence a King at Arms, and called him Clarencieux. His proper Office is to marshal the Funerals of the lesser Nobility or Gentry, on the South Side of the Trent. Norroy's Office is the same on the North Side of Trent, as appears by his Name, The Northern King. The Business of the Heralds is likewise to denounce War, to proclaim Peace, or to be employed in the King's Martial Messages. They are Judges also of Council how Matters stood in that Kingdom. The Substance of his Instructions was as follows :

1429.

I. That it was necessary to hasten the Departure of Ratcliffe's and the Cardinal's Troops, and to send the Regent notice of the precise Time of their Imbarkation.

II. That the Dauphin (for so the Regent called the King of France) was Master of Troye, Châlon, and several other Places, some of which had voluntarily surrendered. That he was to enter on that very Day, July the 16th, the City of Rheims, where he had a mind to be crowned; and that afterwards his Intent was to exert his utmost in order to become Master of Paris, but that he should find it a more difficult Task than he imagined.

III. That the Duke of Bretagne had done his Duty, and that the City of Paris would have been lost before now had it not been for him. That he was set out that very Day for Artois, in order to hasten his Troops and join the English Army.

IV. That the Regent was to set out within two Days for Normandy and Picardy, where he would draw the Garrisons together, and expect the Troops that were to come from England.

V. Lastly, The Council of France most heartily besought the King to come and be crowned at Paris.

Upon this last Article it was resolved, that the young King, now about eight Years old, should go over into France, and be crowned, but that first he should be crowned in England.

of Gentlemens Arms, marshal all the Solemnities at the Coronation of Princes. &c. Vestegau derives the Word Herald from Here an Army, and Heals a Champion, as much as to say, the Champion of the Army. Besides the three Kings, there are six other properly called Heralds, as they were created to attend Dukes, &c. Viz. York, Lancaster, Somerset, Richmond, Chester and Windsor. There are Four more called Marshals or Pursuivants at Arms, who commonly succeed in the Place of Heralds, namely, Blue-Mantle, Rouge-Cross, Rouge-Dragon, and Rert Cullis.

1429.
Henry crowned at London.
The Protec-torship is suppressed.

In pursuance of this Resolution, the Ceremony of the Coronation was performed on the 6th of November. Six Days after the Parliament, which was then assembled, ordered that the Dignity of Protector and Defender of the Church should be suppressed, but that the Duke of GloUCESTER should keep that of first Counsellor to the King. This was a very great Mortification to that Prince, who little expected any such Thing. Indeed, as the King's Coronation added nothing to his Capacity, the Kingdom seemed to require a Protector as much as ever. But it was pretended that the Protectorship was inconsistent with the Dignity of a crown'd Head. We shall see hereafter that this Rule was not always observed. The Duke however acquiesced with a good Grace to the Ordinance as far as it concerned him, saving to the Duke of Bedford his Brother his Rights.

Charles continues his Conquests.

Whilst they were taken up in England with preparing for the Coronation, Charles had carried on his Conquests with great Rapidity. And yet his own Coronation had kept him eleven Days at Rheims. If the Regent had then had an Army in the Field, he might easily have cooped him up in that Corner of France, where he had but few Places, surrounded with the Enemy's Garrisons. But the Duke was then in Picardy with a few Troops, expecting those that were to come from England. Charles therefore improved the Advantage which the Distance of his Enemy gave him. The Inhabitants of the English Towns being for the most Part well-affected to him, nothing hindered them from showing him Marks of their Inclinations. The reason is, because the Duke of Bedford had been constrained to weaken his Garrisons exceedingly, in order to compose an Army. This was the Cause that in a very short Space Charles became Master of Soissons, Provins, Chateau Thierry, Crepi, and some other Places, which did not so much as stay to be attacked, the English Garrisons not being strong enough to prevent the Burghers from doing as they had a mind.

Several Places surrender of their own accord.

The Regent marches towards him.

Mean time, the Duke of Bedford having at length received the Succours he expected, began to march in order to go and stop the Progress of his Enemy. At Crepi, Charles had had advice that the Duke was coming to give him Battle. A few Days after the two Armies were very near one another on a large Plain, where nothing hindered them from coming to Blows. The Number of Troops on both Sides was pretty equal. But as the King had more Horse, the Regent did not care to attack him. Besides, the Posture of his Affairs required that he should not fight but with odds. Upon which account, he ordered his Camp to be strongly intrenched. He was in hopes that the impetuous Humour of the French would cause them to commit the same Fault they had fallen into at Vernueil, and on several other Occasions; and that they would endeavour to force his Intrenchments, in which case he promised himself certain Victory. But he was deceived in his Expectations this time. Charles, grown wise by so many former Instances, was content with facing him, and trying to draw him out of his Lines, without hazarding an Attack, the Success whereof appeared too doubtful. At length, finding the English kept their Station, he marched off in order to push his Conquests, well knowing that most of the Towns were ready to receive him. The Regent followed him close. But as he would run no Hazard without an apparent Advantage, he had the Mortification to see him enter Senlis, Beauvais, Campiegne, Creil, Pont St. Maixance, Lagny, Bray, Gournay, Melun, Sens. All these Places opened their Gates to the King, being no longer over-aw'd by the Garrisons which the Regent had been forced to draw out.

1429.
The two Armies are very near one another, and part without fighting.

Several Towns surrender to Charles.

On the other Hand, the Constable Richmond who was in Normandy, having found Means to augment his Troops to the Number of Eight Thousand Men, had taken Evreux, and threatned the whole Province. The Duke of Bedford fearing he would make a greater Progress, hastened thither immediately, not being able to bear the Thoughts of losing a Country from whence he had in a great Measure his Subsistence.

The Regent
marches to the Relief of Normandy.

Whilst the Duke of Bedford was employed in Normandy, Charles, Master of the Field in the Isle of France, approached Paris, and went and encamped at Montmartre. He forthwith published a general Pardon for the Parisians, imagi-

Charles makes an Attempt upon Paris.

1429. imagining that disheartned at his Conquests, they would take up Arms, and drive the English out of the City. But the Regent had ordered Matters so well there, that not a Soul stirred. At length, finding he could expect nothing from the Citizens, he attacked the Suburbs of St. Honorius; but his Troops were beat back with great Loss. La Pucelle, who had exposed herself very much in this Assault, was wounded, and tumbled into the Ditch. Every one thought her dead; but being drawn out in the Night, she recovered of her Wounds.

Lagni and St. Dennis taken by the English.

The Season not permitting the two Armies to keep the Field any longer, Charles retired, and went and passed the Winter at Bourges. The Regent likewise marched back to Paris, after he had drove the Constable out of Normandy. During the Winter, he carried by Storm St. Dennis and Lagni, which Places very much annoyed the Parisians.

Disposition of the Duke
of Burgundy since the Turn of Affairs.

Before we close the Occurrences of this Year, we must not omit to show how the Duke of Burgundy stood affected, since the great Turn of the English Affairs. In how flourishing a Condition soever Charles might be, he was very sensible that all would not do; unless he could gain so potent an Enemy as the Duke of Burgundy. The Truth is, if that Prince had thought fit to assist the English with all his Forces, there is no question but he would have prevented this fatal Revolution. If even after the raising of the Siege of Orleans, he could have been brought to aid them in proportion to his Ability, he would still have turned the Scale on their Side. But he was taking other Measures. His Policy suggested to him, that by too powerfully assisting the English, he should have very troublesome Masters, as he had already experienced in the Business of Hainault. And therefore, since he was to have a Sovereign, he chose much rather to see a Prince of his Blood on the Throne of France than a Foreigner. But he carefully concealed his Sentiments, lest both Parties should take the Advantage of them against him. It was manifest, that in openly showing his Inclination to abandon the English, he would do himself great Prejudice. King Charles would grow less eager to come to an Agreement with him, and it may be the Duke

Duke of Bedford would have endeavoured to be before-hand with him, and strike up a separate Peace with the French exclusive of him. This at least was what the Duke of Burgundy had reason to fear, considering the Posture of the Affairs of the English, since the Battle of Patay. He resolved then to keep on assisting the English, but in such a Manner as should give Charles some hopes he had abated of his Resentment. He judged rightly, that in taking this Course he should sell his Friendship at a dearer Rate, or at worst, he should be able to remain as he was, till such Terms as he wanted should be offered him. Charles having had some Intimation of the Temper the Duke of Burgundy was in with regard to him, dispatched secret Agents to treat with him. But the Duke thought it not a proper Time yet to discover his Mind. He was apprehensive, that in case the Duke of Bedford should come to know it, he would without him agree with King Charles; whereas his Intent was to make his own Peace at the Expence of the English. The Sequel manifestly showed that this was his Design. Most certain it is, that he had already determined what to do, though he did not think fit to set the Negotiation so soon on Foot. A remarkable Instance how little the strongest Alliance are to be depended upon. The sad Effect of Dishonesty, too common among Men, and from which Princes in particular are not free. As they cannot, notwithstanding their Treaties, trust one another, they live in continual Fear of being over-reached by their Allies. And therefore, taking it for granted that they may be abandoned, they endeavour to be before-hand, and make no scruple to break through their Engagements, upon the Prospect of any considerable Advantage. Let a Man run over all Histories as well Antient as Modern, and he will find scarce any one considerable Alliance but what was violated by some notorious Piece of Fraud.

It would be a difficult Matter to describe the Concern, Trouble, Complaints, and Murmurings in England, upon the Turn of Affairs in France. Some blamed the Generals for not having done their Duty. Others perceiving no natural Cause of so wonderful a Change, affirmed that it must 1429.

1430.

Murmur-ings in England.

1430.

must needs have happened by the Malice of the Devil, who had made use of La Pucelle for his Instrument, and boldly maintained that she was a Witch. In short, some there were that threw all the Blame on the Council and the Duke of Gloucester. They justly taxed them with having very unseasonably undertaken the Affair of Hainault, at a Time when, if all the Forces of England had been united against France, they would have infallibly finished the Conquest of that Kingdom. Nothing but Complaints were heard from all Hands. Every one seeking in the Mismanagements of those that were at the Head of Affairs, for a Cause of this fatal Turn. Among all the Reflections cast on the Government, the Council gave the greatest Heed to what those said, who affirmed, that the keeping so long the French Princes, and particularly the Dukes of Orleans and Bourbon Prisoners in England, was a very great Oversight. That no body could be ignorant what great Advantages the late King had reaped by the Dissentions of the French. That consequently the Prisoners should have been sent back to their own Country, where in all likelihood they would have renewed their old Quarrels: Whereas, the detaining them had been a Means to procure France a Tranquillity very destructive to England. That at least, if the Duke of Orleans and Bourbon had been in France with King Charles, the English would have had more considerable Succours from the Duke of Burgundy than what he had furnished hitherto. In fine, that it was not too late yet to release these two Princes; and as England had been drained by the Continuance of so tedious a War, their Ransoms might serve to put Things upon a better Foot. These Reasonings seemed very plausible. But on the other Hand, the late King's Orders about the Prisoners, were to the Duke of Gloucester and the Council a Law which they durst not attempt to violate.

Several find fault that the French Prisoners had not been released.

Articles for releasing the Duke of Bourbon.
Act. Pub.
X. 434.

However, as to the Duke of Bourbon in particular, there were Reasons which might induce the Council to overlook the late King's Orders. In 1431, that Prince had made a Treaty with Henry V, whereby he was obliged to swear the Peace of Troye, to pay such a Sum for for his Ransom, and deliver up two of his Sons and his fortified Towns in Hostage, till he had fully perform'd his Oath. Henry V dying before the Treaty was finish'd, it was renewed with some Alteration in 1428, and young Henry had receiv'd as King of France, the Duke's Homage. There was nothing wanting but the Ratification, which had been put off only for fear the People would not be pleased with the Proceeding. In fine, this Year 1430 all Difficulties were got over, and the Treaty was ratified. But some Obstacles were started in the Execution, which hindered the Duke from being set at Liberty. He died after all in England in 1433, after a ten Years Captivity. 1430. p. 438. He dies. p. 452.

Another Reason which had induced the Council to treat with the Duke of Bourbon, was the Hopes that his Ransom would serve to defray the Charges of the King's Journey, who was ready to set out for France. But this Means having failed, there was a Necessity of having recourse to Loans, which plainly showed how low the Treasury was, and with what Difficulty Funds sufficient for carrying on the War were raised. p. 461.

Henry sat out at length on the 24th of April, attended by great Numbers of the Nobility, and particularly the Cardinal of Winchester, who had been appointed Chief Counsellor of the King with a large Salary. This honourable Presence had been made use of to keep him out of the Kingdom, lest in the Absence of the King, and under the Regency of the Duke of Gloucester who was made Guardian of the Realm, their Dissention might breed Disturbances. Henry being arrived at Calais, made but a short Stay there. He went on immediately for Roan, where he spent almost all the rest of the Year. Whilst they were making at Paris Preparations for his Coronation, which could not be got ready till the Month of December. About the Middle of the Month he came to the Metropolis, where he was crowned * on the 17th with all the Solemnity the Circumstances of the Time would admit of. Henry goes to France. p. 452. and is crowned at Paris.

* By the Cardinal of Winchester.

1430.
The Duke of Bedford secures the Duke of Burgundy
to England.

Whilst the King was at Roan, the Duke of Bedford omitted nothing that could help to put his Affairs upon a better Foot. He had foreseen the Designs of the Duke of Burgundy, and as he was very sensible of the Consequences, he left no Stone unturned to prevent them. It cost him Champagne and Brie, or at least, the Places he still had in those Provinces, which he was obliged to give him up, to keep him firm to the Alliance of England. But at the same Time, he was enabled by this Means to stop the Progress of Charles, who had pushed his Conquests with a wonderful Swift-ness.

The Duke of Burgundy's third Marriage.

Another Thing conduced to the retaining some Time longer the Duke of Burgundy in the Interests of the English: And that was his third Marriage with Isabella of Portugal, near Relation of the King of England, and who had not the same Affinity with King Charles as Bonne of Artois his former Wife. The Duke of Bedford therefore having received Succours from the Duke of Burgundy, took the Field, and became Master in the Isle of France of several Places, which though of little Consequence in themselves, were of great Importance, as they were troublesome to Paris.

The Regent makes some Conquests.

The Duke of Burgundy besieges
Compiègne.
La Pucelle goes thither.

Shortly after the Duke of Burgundy entered France in Person, at the Head of a powerful Army. He retook first, Torcy and Soissons, and then laid Siege to Compiègne. Flavy commanded in that Place, with a numerous Garrison and Provisions for six Months. Upon the first News of this Siege, The Maid of Orleans and Xaintrailles had thrown themselves into the Town, to the Governor's great Vexation, who easily saw they were come to rob him of the Honour of the Defense.

She makes a Sally, and is taken Prisoner.

On the 25th of May La Pucelle made a Sally, and fought with a great deal of Conduct and Resolution. At length seeing herself constrained to retreat, she put herself in the Rear, and every now and then stood her Ground, in order to stop the Enemies who pressed her hard. In this manner, she got off all her Men safe. But when she would have entered the Town, she found the Gate shut and the Draw-Bridge up. It is said this was done by the Governnow's

nour's Order, who was very glad to ruin her, pretending he did not know but she was come in. But this Circumstance is not well proved. However la Pucelle finding there was no way to escape her Pursuers, surrendered herself Prisoner to the Bastard of Vendôme, who immediately delivered her to the Earl of Ligni the Duke of Burgundy's General. The Duke of Bedford overjoyed that this Prey was fallen into the Hands of his Allies, demanded her of the Earl of Ligni with so much earnestness, that the Earl could not deny him. He required however a Reward suitable to the Importance of such a Prisoner. Some Time after the Town was relieved by the Earl of Vendôme, who got in Troops and Ammunition just as the Place was reduc'd to Extremity. Whereupon the Earl of Ligni Commander in Chief, seeing no likelihood of succeeding, rais'd the Siege, and the Duke of Burgundy who had staid all the while at Noyon retired into Artois.

She is delivered to the Duke of Bedford.

The Siege is rais'd.

I pass over in silence numberless Attempts on both Sides, and divers Skirmishes which contributed but little to the Decision of the main Affair. It will however be proper to observe, that the pretended Inspiration of la Pucelle had made so deep an Impression in the Minds of the French, that the Marshal de Boussac and Xaintrailles suffered themselves to be imposed upon by a Device, which doubtless would not have produced its Effect, had it not been backed by this Prepossession. A Shepherd living near Roan, came to the Marshal and told him, that Heaven had revealed to him a certain private Way by which he would lead him into the very City of Roan. Boussac having forthwith imparted the Secret to Xaintrailles, they were both of Opinion that they ought not to let so fair an Opportunity slip. Thus perswaded as they were that they had God himself for their Guide, they marched with a Body of chosen Troops after the Shepherd, who led them into an Ambush, where Talbot waited for them. Their Troops were all cut in Pieces, and Xaintrailles made Prisoner.

Boussac and Xaintrailles deceived by a Shepherd.

They are defeated, and Xaintrailles made Prisoner.

These are the most remarkable Events happened in France during the Year 1430, with regard to the War. We must now turn to England and see what passed there.

1430.
The Cardinal receives a fresh Mortification.
A. S. Pub.
X. 472.

In the Absence of the Cardinal of Winchester, the Duke of Gloucester brought him into Troubles which gave him no small Uneasiness. The Duke told the Council that the Cardinal intended to leave the King, and return to his Place at the Board, with Design to raise Disturbances in the Kingdom; that his Intent was the more criminal as he meant to make use of the Pope's Authority to free himself from the Obligation he was under to assist the King in France, the which was visibly subjecting the Orders and Regulations of the Council to a foreign Power. Upon these Complaints, the Council issued out a Proclamation, prohibiting all the King's Subjects, of what Rank soever, under Pain of Imprisonment, to attend the Cardinal if he left the King without Leave.

Truce with Castile.
P. 473. and Scotland.
P. 487.

On the 8th of November a Truce was concluded at London with the King of Castile for one Year, to commence May the 1st, 1431.

About the Middle of December, the Embassadors of England signed at Edinburgh a five Years Truce with Scotland, to begin the same Day with that made with Castile.

1431.
The Duke of Bedford resolves to have la Pucelle tried for her Life.

La Pucelle being in the Hands of the English, ever since the Siege of Compiègne, the Duke of Bedford had ordered her to be carried to Roan, where he intended to sacrifice her to the Vengeance he believed due to the English Nation. There was without doubt a great deal of Policy in this Resolution. All France was possessed with the Notion that she was sent from God, and the English Soldiers imagined that in fighting against her they had to deal with the Devil. Wherever she appeared, they deemed the French Troops invincible. At least one cannot ascribe to any other Cause the Terror that had seized their Souls, and the prodigious Alteration in them in that Respect. It was therefore of the utmost Consequence to undeceive them. The taking of La Pucelle had already began to pave the Way. It was natural enough to infer from thence, that had she acted by God's Command, there was no likelihood of her ever falling into such a Misfortune. But to confirm this first Impression, it was not improper to give the frightened English to understand, that she had done nothing but but by Means of Witchcraft and Sorcery. It may be the Duke of Bedford was himself of that Opinion, as one may conclude from his Expressions in the Letter to the King before-mentioned. Be that as it will, (for I do not pretend either to accuse or excuse the Prince, that it was done out of Policy or Vengeance) he managed Matters so, that the King by the Advice of his Council of France, ordered that Joan of Arc should be tried for a Witch. Pursuant to this Order, she was delivered to the Ecclesiastical Judges *, who after a long Examination, condemned her as a Heretick, to live by way of Penance upon Bread and Water all the Days of her Life. Some Time after, under Colour of her relapsing into her former Errours, she was tried again by the same Judges, who delivered her over to the secular Arm to be burnt alive. This Sentence was put in Execution in the old Market-Place at Roan, on the 30th of May 1431.

1431.

She is condemned to Imprisonment, and afterwards to be burnt.

Thus far the French and English are agreed. No one can deny that she performed great Exploits, and inspired the French with Courage, and the English with Terror. But the French ascribe what appears wonderful in her, to the immediate Power of God, and the English to the Artifices of the Devil. What shall one think of this Matter? Perhaps neither of them are in the Right, and there is a third Opinion which wants not plausible Reasons. As the Examination of these three Opinions would interrupt the Thread of the History too long, I shall not stay to discuss them here. They who want to be more fully informed in this Matter, may read a Dissertation which will be inserted at the End of the present Reign, wherein I shall endeavour to give this Affair all the Light it is capable of.

Various Opinions about her.

Notwithstanding his Advantage, King Charles saw himself but little able to carry on the War. The Places he had taken were for the most Part ruined, and consequently incapable of giving him much Assistance. Besides, as they

* She was tried by the Bishop of Beauvais, in whose Diocese she was taken.

1431.

they had voluntarily surrendered, he did not care to press them, for fear they should turn again to the English. They might have done so with the same ease, since it was not in his Power to place Garrisons strong enough to keep them in awe. On the other Side, the English brought low by so many Losses, wherein no better Condition to keep Armies in the Field. Wherefore, during the rest of this Year, the War was carried on only by Parties, and by surprizing of Places, the greatest Part whereof were but weakly guarded.

*The French
surprize Chartres.*

In this manner it was that the French became Masters of Chartres, by means of a Cart loaden with Wine, which they caused to be overturned just under the Portcullis. On the other Hand, the English took Montargis, by holding Intelligence with a young Woman, who persuaded a Barber, her Lover, to let them into the Town.

The Fair of Caen plunder'd.

Loré a French Captain made an Inroad up to the very Gates of Caen upon a Fair-Day, and carried off above two Thousand People, with a very great Booty. After that he retired to Silley, a small Town in Maine, where he was besieged by the Earl of Arundel. But the Duke of Alençon suddenly coming to his Relief, obliged the English to march off.

This Year Xaintrailles and Gaucour, who were ravaging Normandy, were beaten and made Prisoners. A Party of English took also Villeneuve lez-sens from the French. This is all that passed worth noting in France between the two Parties. But a more important Affair happened in Lorraine, wherein King Charles and the Duke of Burgundy were concern'd, and of which therefore it will not be amiss to say a word or two by the way.

War of Lorraine.

Lewis, Cardinal of Bar, and Marquis of Pont-a-Mousson, being the last Issue-Male of the House of Bar, the Children of Violante his Sister, Queen of Arragon, were to be his Heirs. Among these Children, Violante of Arragon had married Lewis II. King of Sicily, and Duke of Anjou, and had by him three Sons, Lewis, René and Charles. Of these Princes, the Cardinal Duke of Bar pitched upon René for his Heir, and married him to Isabella, third Daughter

Daughter of Charles Duke of Lorrain, who had no Issue-Male. It is said, that Isabella's two elder Sisters had renounced the Succession of the Duke their Father. René being Duke of Bar by the Death of the Cardinal his Uncle, would likewise have taken Possession of Lorrain, upon the Decease of the Duke his Father-in-law. But Anthony Earl of Vandemont, Son of Frederick, younger Brother of Duke Charles, disputed the Succession with him. This was the Occasion of a War between these two Princes; wherein King Charles took the Part of René his Brother-in-law, and the Duke of Burgundy sided with the Earl of Vandemont. On the 2d of July this Year, the two Competitors fought at Bulegneville a bloody Battle, wherein René was worsted, taken Prisoner, and carried to Dijon. There were Twelve Hundred French slain in this Action. This Loss no doubt helped to hinder King Charles from continuing his Progress.

The Affair concerning the See of Winchester, which the Duke of Gloucester would have deprived the Cardinal of, was rather suspended than determined in 1429, by an Order which the Council gave the Prelate to forbear for that Time officiating as Bishop on St. George's Day. The Duke willing to take Advantage of the Cardinal's Absence, who was with the King at Paris, managed it so, that about the End of this Year the Affair was brought upon the Board again. On the 6th of November, the King's Attorney-General appearing before the Council, required that the Cardinal should be deprived of his See, affirming, that by the Laws of the Land, the same Person could not be Cardinal and Bishop at the same Time in England. He supported his Assertion with the Examples of Simon Langham and Robert Kilwarby, formerly Archbishops of Canterbury, who, upon their being made Cardinals, resigned the Archbishopricks. When he had done speaking, the Duke of Gloucester addressing himself to the Bishop of Worcester, required him to say, upon his Oath of Allegiance to the King, whether it was not true, that the Cardinal had obtained of the Pope an Exemption from the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, for himself, for the

An attempt to take the See from the Bishop of Winchester.

1431. the City, and for the whole Diocese of Winchester. His Aim was to show by this how inconvenient it was to suffer that a Cardinal should hold a Bishoprick in England. The Bishop of Worcester replied, after some Intreaty, that the Bishop of Lichfield being at Rome, had sued for and obtained this Exemption for the Cardinal, who had reimbursed all the Charges; and that he had this from that Prelate's own Mouth. This Affair having been long debated, by reason of the two Parties in the Council, it was at length resolved, that before any thing should be decided, the Cardinal should be heard, and that the Judges should be consulted upon the Matter. Thus it was not yet possible for the Duke of Gloucester to compass his Ends.

Conference about a Peace.

Whilst Henry was in France, Pope Engenius II. Successor of Martin V. had sent thither the Cardinal of Santa Crux, to try to persuade the two Kings to a Peace. This Legate had at length prevailed with them to send their Ambassadors to Auxerre. But this Congress was to no Purpose. They did not so much as come to a Conference, because, if we may believe the French Authors, the Ambassadors of England refused to acknowledge King Charles's as Ambassadors of France. The 31st of May was however fixed for their Meeting: but it was in vain, since there was no Place appointed for holding the Congress. The Court of England had named for Plenipotentiaries the Bishop of Rocheſter and some others.

A&C. Pub.
X. 500.

1432.
Henry returns to England.

Henry returned to England in the Beginning of the Year 1432, being full Ten Years of Age. As his Journey to France had produced no great Effects, his going from thence made no Alteration in his Affairs. They were still managed by the Duke of Bedford in France, and by the Duke of Gloucester in England. The Government of two Kingdoms was no light Burden to these Princes, at a Time when the King's Affairs were manifestly going to Ruin. The Duke of Bedford was obliged to be always upon his Guard, in order to stand against Enemies who some time since were grown very formidable. But this was a small Matter in Comparison of his Trouble occasioned by the perpetual Distrust he was in with respect to his own Friends, or those

Ill State of
the Duke of Bedford in France.

1432.

those who pretended to be well-affected to him. The Duke of Burgundy's ambiguous Proceedings justly made him uneasy. The Duke of Bretagne was no more to be depended upon. In short, since the Decline of the Affairs of the English, the Towns which seemed to side with them were faithful only in proportion to the Strength of their Garrisons. The Regent had experienced the Truth of this. Paris itself, the Metropolis, on which it may be said all depended, was not so well-disposed as that he could rely upon its Loyalty, or at least its Attachment to the Interest of England wholly depended upon that of the Duke of Burgundy. Add to this the inconsiderable Aids of Men and Money which the Duke of Bedford receiv'd from England, at a Time when he stood most in need of them. To complete his Misfortune, the Regent found himself constrained to bear almost the whole Weight of the publick Affairs, as well Military as Civil, upon his own Shoulders; those who had assisted him in the Beginning of his Regency being for the most Part either dead or Prisoners in the Hands of the Enemy. In this Perplexity, he resolved to send to King Charles, and propose the Exchange of Talbot for Xaintrailles, and his Offer was accepted. As he durst not leave Paris, and as the War was carrying on in several Parts of the Kingdom, he could not well do without such a General as Talbot, though to procure him he should be forced to give one as good to the Enemy.

Exchange of Talbot for Xaintrailles. Act. Pub. X. 507.

If the Affairs of the English were upon an ill Foot in France, they were in no better Posture in England. Subsidies were granted by the Parliament with great Reluctance, for carrying on so destructive a War, of which People began to be tired, since it prospered not as formerly. On the other Hand, the Quarrel between the Duke of Gloucester and the Cardinal still continued with greater Bitterness than ever, and began to turn to the Duke's Disadvantage. In the last Year's Parliament the Cardinal had found means to gain the Commons to his Side, and thereby to give his Adversary a grievous Mortification. The House, willing to show him Marks of their Favour, had presented to the King a Petition, intreating him that he would be pleased,

Continuation of the Quarrel between the Duke of Gloucester and the Cardinal.

The Cardinal gains ground upon his Enemy.

1432.

in Consideration of the great Services the Cardinal had done the State, to give him a full Pardon for what he might have done contrary to the Laws, particularly with regard to the Statute of Præmunire. This was a decisive Stroke for the Cardinal, since the Commons Petition being granted, he was skreened from all Prosecution. However the Duke of Gloucester did not give out. He pretended, that notwithstanding the Pardon, he had Evidences to produce, which would prove the Cardinal guilty of High-Treason, a Crime which could not be supposed to be included in the Letters of Pardon. The Cardinal, who was then in Flanders about the King's Affairs, forthwith repaired to London without having ask'd Leave, and by that Means gave his Enemy a Handle to order his Baggage to be seized. Next Day after his Arrival he went to the House of Lords, and said, he was come to clear himself of the Crimes they pretended to lay to his Charge, and to vindicate his Innocence against any Person whatever that should offer to be his Accuser. The Duke of Gloucester not thinking proper to stand by what he had said, Answer was made the Prelate, that as no body appeared to accuse him, they acknowledged him for a loyal Subject. He returned the House Thanks for this Declaration, and desired it might be drawn up in Form; the which was granted. Then he complained that upon his landing at Sandwich his Baggage had been seized, and requested that it might be restored. He maintained that the Seizure was made without just Cause, and offered to lend the King Six Thousand Pounds for six Years, on Condition that if in that Time the Seizure appeared to be lawful, the Money lent should be forfeited to the King's Use. He offered also to lend him the like Sum, and to defer the Demand of the Thirteen Thousand Marks due to him on another Account, provided the Payment of the whole should be assigned out of the next Subsidy granted to the King. His Aim was to show what regard he had to the King's and the People's Wants. His Offers were accepted, and whatever had been seized was returned him. Thus the Duke of Gloucester was so far from being able to hurt his Enemy, that he had the Mortification to see

see him receive the Applauses of both Houses. Mean while their Dissentions produced very ill Effects. As the Duke of Gloucester had Friends and Adherents in the Council, the Opposition generally between the two Parties could not but be very prejudicial to the King's Affairs. Whilst the Duke and Cardinal minded only their own private Affairs, the War in France was neglected, though it was more necessary than ever to exert their utmost towards carrying it on.

If England had known how to improve her Advantages, she had a very favourable Opportunity to repair some of her Losses. King Charles languished in the Arms of Agnes Serres his Mistress, and left to his Ministers and Generals the Care of his most important Affairs. Nothing affected him but his Pleasures. It was not without extreme Reluctance that he bestowed a few Moments upon the War and Affairs of State. So impatient was he to return to his Pleasures, which these troublesome Matters obliged him to break off, that he sought only how to commit to the Care of another, whatever might give him any Disturbance. La Trimonille his Favourite was generally accused of soothing him up in this supine and indolent State. But the more clear-sighted plainly saw the King began to grow weary of him, and that he was uneasy under the Yoke he had put upon his own Neck. The Constable, though Absent, was soon informed how the Case stood. The Spies he kept at Court were too sharp for a Thing of that Moment to be long a Secret to him. As he was of a proud and violent Spirit, he could not bear without Indignation to see La Trimonille get the start of him, and had formed a Design to serve him in the same manner as he had done Louvet, De Giac and Beaulieu. The Moment he came to know that the King no longer looked upon La Trimonille with the same Eye as formerly, he immediately set about working his Ruin. But as he saw that though he outed this Favourite, he was not so much in the King's good Graces as to have any Prospect of supplying his Place, he formed a Project of introducing Charles of Anjou the Queen's Brother into that Post. A strange Project, to attempt to take from a Indolence of King Charles.

Troubles in his Court.

1432.

La Trimouille is removed,

and Charles of Anjou becomes Favourite.

Prince one Favourite and give him another against his Will, or at least without consulting him ! As soon as the Constable had prepared every Thing at Court, and Matters were ripe for Execution, La Trimouille was seized in his Bed, in the King's own House, who was then at Cbinon, and committed to Prison at Montreux. Charles was enraged at the News, and would immediately have gone and taken Vengeance. But when he saw all the Princes of the Blood, and all the Great Men at Court declare against La Trimouille, he durst not proceed any farther. He called to Mind with Dread the Confederacy formed against him when he would have screened Louvet, and was afraid of the like again. Besides, his Distaste for the Favourite, who was only so in Name, being added to this Reason of State, he cast him off without much Concern. Charles of Anjou came to give him Comfort, and succeeded so well, that according to the Constable's Scheme, he became the Favourite, and La Trimouille was forgot.

It is easy to judge that a Prince of Charles's Character, who hated nothing more than War, and kept as far from it as possible, would not have been very formidable to the Duke of Bedford, if the Succours which the Duke received from England had been sufficient to enable him to make some considerable Attempt. But he could no longer keep an Army in the Field without draining his Garrisons and exposing the Towns either to be taken by surprize, or tempted to follow the Example of those Places that had voluntarily surrendered to King Charles.

Lagni taken by the French.

About the End of the last Year Foucaut had taken from the Duke Lagni, a Place often taken and retaken, and which the Neighbourhood of Paris render'd of great Importance. A little after the Regent had attempted to retake it, but without Success. In the Beginning of this Year the Marshal de l'Isle-Adam and the Earl of Arundel had attacked it in vain, having been obliged to give over their Enterprize by a vigorous Sally from the Town. At last in the Beginning of August, the Duke of Bedford went himself and besieged it with an Army of six Thousand Men. But on the 10th of the same Month the Bastard of Orleans

The English endeavour in vain to retake it.

Orleans got a Convoy in, maugre the Precautions and Vigilance of the Duke, after which he retired and passed the Maine. His March having made the Duke apprehensive that he held some Intelligence in Paris, he suddenly raised the Siege in order to prevent his Designs. Thus Lagni was besieged three Times in vain within the Space of seven or eight Months.

On the other Side, a small Body of French drawn out of the Garrisons near the Loire had surprized Montargis. But as the Castle made a brave Defence, the French not being able either to take it by Storm or keep the Town, were forced to march off. In Normandy twelve Hundred English invested La Hire in Louviers, and after a three Months Blockade, constrained the Place to capitulate.

These were Matters of little Moment. But on the 13th of November there happened one of much greater Consequence. And that was the Death of Ann of Burgundy, Dutchess of *Bedford. This Loss affected not the Duke her Spouse alone, but all the English with him, since it broke the Bond of Friendship between the Dukes of Bedford and Burgundy, and since the Coldness which succeeded their Union proved very fatal to England.

The Council of Basil had been sitting ever since last Year, but England had sent hither no Ambassadors. About the End of this Year, the Pope and Council who were quarrelling about Pre-eminence, having sent each apart Legates to the King, the Archbishop of Tork, the Bishop of Rochester, the Earl of Huntington, and several others were appointed by the Beard to go to the Council.

In the Beginning of the Year 1433 there happened in Normandy a dangerous Insurrection, which would have been no less fatal to the English than the raising of the Siege of Orleans, if by their Diligence, they had not prevented in good Time Part of the Mischief which might have ensued. Sixty Thousand Peasants of that Province having taken up Arms.

* He buried her at the Celestine's in Paris, within the Chapel of Orleans, where a noble Tomb of Black Marble, with her Effigies as a Princess placed thereon, is still to be seen. Her Epitaph says, she died November the 14th, 1432. Dugdale.

1433. Arms, divided themselves into two Bodies, one of which consisting of forty Thousand Men, marched into Vexin, and the other towards Caen. Had Charles's Army been near enough to back them, he would without Dispute have over-run all Normandy. The Rebels soon became Masters of Caen, Harfleur, Dieppe, and Lillebonne. In all likelihood they would have made a much greater Progress, if the Earl of Arundel had not with the utmost Expedition marched against those that were got together in Vexin. As these Men had no Person of Note to head them, they suffered themselves to be surprized in the Night, and easily yielded him a Victory which was more advantageous to his Master than glorious for him. Those of Caen, though not so numerous, would have given him more Trouble, because the Marshal of Rieux was gone to head them. But terrified at the News of the Defeat of their Companions, they returned to their Homes. The Marshal seeing himself thus deserted, took with him some of the most courageous and retired to Dieppe. Mean while Arundel taking Advantage of their Consternation, found Means to recover Caen and Lillebonne. But Dieppe and Harfleur, Places of great Importance, remained in the Hands of the French.

The Duke of Bedford marries Ja-quelina of Luxemburg.

The Duke of Burgundy is offended with it.

This very Year another Thing helped to embroil the Affairs of the English. The Duke of Bedford being a Widower, took to Wife in March Jaquelina of Luxemburg Earl of St. Paul. The Duke of Burgundy was extremely offended that this Marriage should be made without his Knowledge. He thought the Duke of Bedford ought to have shown him more Respect, since besides their being united together by so many Ties, he married the Daughter of one of his Vassals. There is no doubt but the Duke of Bedford, who was very prudent and circumspect, had his Reasons for hastening his Marriage without imparting it to the Duke of Burgundy. Be that as it will, as it greatly concerned him to keep fair with that Prince, he paid him some Compliments by the Cardinal of Winchester, who procured an Interview at St. Omer, where the two Princes met in April. But an unhappy Dispute about Precedency hindered dered their Reconciliation, and caused them to part extremely incensed with one another. These two Princes had often been together without any Contest upon that Score. But the Duke of Burgundy was under a Necessity of starting some Dispute at the Time I am speaking of, to the end it might serve for a Cloak to the Steps he intended to make. He owned Henry for King of France, and the Duke of Bedford for Regent, and Uncle of the present King, how therefore could he pretend to take Place of him?

1433.

During this Year nothing of Moment happened with regard to the War. Charles seemed to have wholly thrown off all Care of his Affairs, in order to relish with the greater Gust the Pleasures of Love and Ease. The Duke of Bedford was Weak, and as he received no longer any Supplies from England, he thought more of keeping what he had than of making new Conquests. Mean while, though the Duke of Burgundy proposed to make a separate Peace with Charles, he believed he should do it upon better Terms, in case he came not empty-handed. With this view, he became Master of St. Valery which Gauconr had taken by Surprize. The Town of Ham defended by the Bastard of Orleans and Xaintrilles, with Laon and Provins were taken also by him. On the other Side, the Earl of Arundel having besieged Silley-le-Guillaume in Maine, the Constable Richmond obliged him to raise the Siege. But the French were scarce gone when the Earl marched back and took the Town.

The Duke of Burgundy takes some Places from the French.

In the mean Time, the Council of England were more intent upon Means how to bring about a Peace, than how to recover what the King had lost in France. The Duke of Orleans, who was still a Prisoner at London, had made the first Overtures, and offered to use his utmost Endeavours towards a Business on the finishing, of which depended his Freedom. To Compass his Ends, he had proposed to bring to Calais, or any other Place the Council should Name, the Queen Dowager of Sicily, Charles of Anjou her Son, the Duke of Bretagne, with the Earls of Richmond and St. Giles his Brothers, the Duke of Alençon, the Earls of Armagnac, Foix, Perdriac, Clermont, and the Archbishops

The Duke of Orleans offers to mediate a Peace.

1433. Archbishop of Rheims, in order to treat with the Ambassadors of England. He demanded likewise Permission to be at the Congress, that he might forward to the utmost of his Power, the Conclusion of a Peace. As his Aim was to engage the Court of England to enter into Negotiation, he made appear that the English would be Gainers by the Treaty, whether it was broken off, or whether it succeeded. These are the two Articles he proposed to the Council for his own Part.

His Offers.
A^ct. Pub.
X. 556.

First, In Case the Peace should be concluded between Henry and the Dauphin (for so he called King Charles;) he promised to do Homage to Henry, as often as he should be required, and never to own any other King of France than him, or his lawful Successors.

II. He promised the same Thing for all his Vassals, for the Duke of Alençon, for the Earls of Armagnac, Perdriac, Angoulême, the Dukes of Milan and Savoy.

In another Article he supposed that the Dauphin would be contented with an honourable and considerable Appennage, the which was the very Thing the English drove at in this Negotiation.

But as it might happen that a Peace should not be concluded; in that Case, the Duke bound himself to acknowledge Henry for sole and rightful King of France. He promised moreover to give him up Blois, Orleans, and all the Places in his Demesns, with Rochelle, Mont St. Michel, Limoges, Bourges, Chinon, Poitiers, Tournay, Beziers, and Loches, or what other Towns he liked instead of these, except Rochelle and Mont St. Michel, which were not to be changed for others.

That if the King should be pleased to make him a Grant of any Demesns in England, he would own him as King of England, for his Liege-Lord, and as such swear Fealty to him.

That he would do what in him lay to put the King in Possession of the Countries and Cities of France, which did not not yet acknowledge him, and that he would serve him at his own Expence.

1433.

That in Case the Treaty came not to a happy Issue, he promised to return a Prisoner to England, till all the Articles above were performed on his Part, on Condition that he should afterwards be set at Liberty without Ransom.

These Articles, which had been before concerted between the King's Commissioners and the Duke, having been agreed to by the Council, the Duke signed and sealed them and swore to observe them. Then Pass-Ports were got ready for the Queen Dowager of Sicily, and all the rest mentioned in the first Article, that they might repair to Calais in October. The Council appointed Plenipotentiaries to go and treat with the French. They are accepted,

When one considers the Engagements the Duke of Orleans entered into by these Articles of Agreement, one cannot but be convinced that he joined with the Court of France, to impose upon the Court of England. This evidently appears by the Hopes he gave that Charles would be satisfied with a bare Appennage : A Thing most certainly far enough from that Prince's Thoughts, and which was insinuated purely to make the English the more readily to fall into the Snare. Moreover by engaging to bring to Calais the Queen of Sicily and the other French Princes and Lords, he would have it understood, that it was their Intent to endeavour a Peace upon that Foot, the which was however directly contrary to their Design, as plainly appeared afterwards. In the next Place, the humble manner that the Duke spoke of the King of England, calling him all along in the Articles his King and Sovereign Lord, is a clear Evidence that he flattered him only to deceive him. In fine, he promised Things out of his Power : For Instance, to give up Places which belonged not to him. But this was the very Thing wherein the Fraud consisted, because his Aim was to make believe, that he was impowered to do so, though the Court of France did not think proper to act openly in the Matter. These are not bare Conjectures. The Sequel of this Negotiation will plainly show Reasons why the Duke of Orleans acted not sincerely, 1433. that the Duke did not act with Sincerity. This however is the very Duke of Orleans that the French would fain put upon us for a Saint, and upon whose Account La Pucelle pretended to have divers Revelations.

1434. It is very easy to perceive that the Duke of Orleans acted in concert with the Court of France, when one considers that Charles was already agreed with the Duke of Burgundy, who only wanted a Pretence to break with England. The Constable Richmond had put the finishing Stroke to a separate Treaty, at a Conference he had held with the Duke of Nevers. He had repaired to that City under colour of making up a Difference between the Duke of Burgundy and the Earl of Clermont. There it was that all the Articles of the separate Peace were agreed upon with the Duke. Nothing was wanting but to furnish him with an Opportunity to take this Step. To which the Project of a Conference about a general Peace was made Instrumental. It was well known that the English would not agree to the Terms which should be proposed to them, and their Refusal it was that the Duke of Burgundy was to use as a Pretence to make a separate Peace. This was the real Motive of the Duke of Orleans's large Offers to the King of England, in case a Peace was not concluded. The Design was to engage Henry's Council in this Negotiation, by putting them in hopes, that whether the Treaty ended in a Peace, or whether it came to nothing, England would still be a great Gainer. The Duke of Bedford and the Council of England, who knew nothing of what had passed between King Charles and the Duke of Burgundy, fell into the Snare. As soon as they consented to the proposed Negotiation, the Duke of Burgundy pretending to be still strictly united with the English, ordered it so, that instead of Calais the City of Arras was pitched upon for the Place of Congress, where all the Parties concerned were to send their Ambassadors. We shall see presently what was done at this Congress.

Hist. de Charles VII. par. B. I.

The English are imposed upon.

The Congress is to be held at Arras.

Continuation of the War in France,

Mean while, the War in France was turned into downright pillaging and robbing. The two Kings being too weak to keep great Armies on Foot, nothing was done on either either Side but by small Bodies and Parties. The most remarkable Occurrences of this Year were these. The French having surprized Rue in Picardy, the Earl of Arundel hastned thither in order to try to retake the Town. Whilst he was upon his March, he heard that the French were fortifying Herberoy near Beauvais, and thought it his best way to drive them from thence before their Works were finished. He sat down therefore before that Place; but upon notice that Vignoles and Xaintrailles were approaching with Twelve Hundred Men, he raised the Siege to go and meet them. A bloody Battle ensued, wherein the Earl of Arundel was mortally wounded and made Prisoner. He died within a few Days, to the great Grief of the Duke of Bedford. 1434.

Death of the Earl of Arundel,
May 13.

About the same Time the Earl of Clermont, now Duke of Bourbon by the Death of the Duke his Father, became Master of Corbeil and Brie-Comte-Robert, by bribing the Governors. A Scotch Officer found likewise the Means to take Vincennes, but he could not keep it.

In the mean Time, Talbot being arrived from England with Three or Four Thousand Men, to whom he joined some other Troops drawn out of the Garrisons, was in such manner Master of the Field that all the French vanished before him. So that without much Opposition he retook Beaumont upon Oyse, Creil, Pont St. Maixance, and Clermont in Beauvaisis. He even began the Siege of Beauvais, but the bad Weather obliged him to give it over. During these little Exploits, King Charles went and took a Turn into Languedoc and Dauphiné. Talbot arrives in,
France, and retakes several Places.

The Frost which was very hard towards the End of this Year and in the Beginning of the next, hindered not the two Parties from continuing the War all the Winter by Sieges, and surprizing of divers Places. The French had a great Advantage, in that most of the English Towns thought of surrendering to King Charles, since the Decline of the Affairs of the English. But it was not from these Successes so inconsiderable in themselves, that Charles expected the Conclusion of the War. It must have been a long while before he could have taken one by one all the Places Charles's Advantage in the Continuation of the War.

1434. the English were possessed of in France. The Congress which was to be at Arras afforded him a much better Prospect, since he was sure of making a Peace there with the Duke of Burgundy.

1435. The News being spread over all Europe that a Peace between France and England was going to be negotiated at Arras, there was scarce a Sovereign Prince but what had a mind to send Ambassadors thither. Pope Eugenius II. and the Council of Basil, who were still at variance, sent theirs also, but separately. From the Pope came the Cardinal of Santa Cruz; and from the Council the Cardinals of Cyprus and Arles. King Charles sent Seventeen Plenipotentiaries, at the Head of whom was the Constable Richmond. Henry appointed Twenty-seven for France and England, of whom the Duke of Burgundy was the First, with Power to Eight of them, among whom were to be the Duke of Burgundy and Archbishop of York, to sign the Peace. Afterwards the same Power was given to the Cardinal of Winchester. Hitherto the Duke of Bedford and Council of England were persuaded of the Sincerity of the Duke of Burgundy. This is evident from his being entrusted with the Secret of the Ambassy, since nothing could be treated about or concluded without him. It must be confessed, that this Prince acted a base Part at this Congress. Shortly after, they had private Intelligence in England that he had desired the Pope to absolve him from his Oath to Henry V. Whereupon the King writ to the Pope to know whether it was true. Eugenius sent back word, that no French Prince had ever applied to him for any such Thing; that he had never granted any such Dispensation; and that for the future, he would behave in that respect so as to give the King reason to be satisfied. We shall see in the Sequel how well he performed his Promise.

Charles's Proposals for Peace.

The Congress of Arras was opened on the 6th of August. It began with King Charles's Proposals. His Ambassadors offered, in his Name, to the King of England, Normandy and Guienne, provided he would quit the Title of King of France, and do Homage for those two Provinces: That is to say, he offered as a Favour the two Provinces which the King

King of England was entirely possessed of, a Favour which he was to purchase with the Resignation of the Title of King of France, and of a great Part of the Kingdom still in his Hands. Supposing there was no other Proof of Charles's being sure of bringing off the Duke of Burgundy from the Side of the English, this alone would be sufficient. For on what other Grounds could Charles, who for three Years past was not able to bring an Army into the Field, make such a Proposal? But, as it has been observed, his Intent was not to conclude a Peace with the English, but only to afford the Duke of Burgundy a Pretence to do as he had already resolved. The Ambassadors of England, surprized at an Offer so very wide of what the Duke of Orleans had made them hope, suddenly broke off the Conference, and withdrew extremely dissatisfied, without vouchsafing to return an Answer. Here it is that several French Authors display their Eloquence, to show to what Height the English had carried their Pride and Insolence, since they rejected so reasonable Offers. A remarkable Instance of the usual Prejudice of Historians in favour of their own Nation.

1435.

The English withdraw with Inaig-nation.

The withdrawing of the English surpriz'd neither the Duke of Burgundy nor the French Ambassadors. They must needs have foreseen, that such Offers would not be hearkened to. One may affirm on the contrary, that in making so unreasonable a Proposal, considering the Posture of Affairs, their sole Aim was to induce the English Ambassadors to do as they did. They did not fail however to make a great Noise about their abrupt Departure, and to represent it as a clear Evidence that they never intended to make Peace. It was this likewise that gave the Duke of Burgundy a Pretence to conclude a separate Treaty with King Charles. He pretended, he was not obliged to follow their Humour, or to render the War everlasting for their sake. Upon this Foundation the Pope's Legate absolved him from all the Oaths he had taken, as well to the late as the present King of England. After that a separate Peace was soon concluded, the Articles being all agreed upon already. Never had King of France made so dishonourable a Peace. Charles was bound by this Treaty to disclaim the Murder

The Duke of Burgundy makes a separate Peace with Charles.

of

1435. of Duke John, to deliver up the Murderers, or if they were not in his Power to banish them the Realm : He promised to found certain Chapels where the Soul of the deceased was to be prayed for Day and Night. He agreed that the Duke of Burgundy should nominate the Priests that were to officiate, and that a Cross should be erected on Montereau Bridge, for a standing Monument of the Reparation of the Murder. He was bound moreover to pay fifty Thousand Crowns of Gold for Duke John's Equipage which was pillaged ; to yield up to the Duke of Burgundy certain Towns, to make him amends for the Charges of the War. Lastly, he freed him from all Homage during his Life. On his Part the Duke consented, that the King might redeem the Towns of St. Quentin, Peronne, Amiens, Corbie, situated on the Somme, for four Hundred Thousand Crowns. One may see by this Article that the Duke was not a Slave to Conscience, since he sold to France the very Places he held by the Bounty of the King of England, pursuant to the Engagements he had entered into with the Duke of Bedford. It will not be amiss to remark, that the Service the Duke of Burgundy did France in making a separate Peace, vastly outweighs in the Minds of the French Historians all that he ever acted against his Country. This has made them very careful in what they have said of him before the Treaty of Arras, for fear it should not agree with what they had to say afterwards. But since this happy Peace, they have extolled to the Skies his Goodness, Wisdom and Probity. He was however the Man that for the sake of Revenge had ruined France, and found no other way to make amends for his Fault, but by a notorious Piece of Treachery to England. What would the French not have said, if he had always continued firm to the English? I am sorry I am obliged to speak thus of a Prince, to whom was given the Surname of Good. But it serves to show, how it happens sometimes, that the Surnames and Encomiums bestowed on Princes ill agree with their real Characters.

I say nothing of the Dispensation granted to the Duke of Burgundy on the Score of his Oath. Every one may make what Reflections upon it he pleases; I shall only add, that in November they published in England Pope Eugenius's Letter mentioned above, attested by the King. Apparently it was to let the Publick see the Honesty of the Court of Rome.

1435.

Act. Pub.
X. 625.

As soon as the English had lost the Assistance of the Duke of Burgundy, their Affairs began to decline so visibly, that it portended their sudden Ruin. As they had not Troops enough to defend all the Places, they were obliged to rely upon the Loyalty of the Inhabitants, who very often proved false. On the other Hand, the Towns upon the Somme, which they had given up to the Duke of Burgundy, being now against them, they found themselves under a Necessity to have an Eye upon that Quarter, for fear they might be made use of to invade the neighbouring Provinces. Wherefore, their whole Care was confined to the Defence of Normandy and Paris, it being impossible to guard all amidst the continual Revolts of the Towns committed to the Care of the Inhabitants. Houdan, St. Denys, Pontoise, Melun, Pont St. Maixance, Meulant, were in the Number of those which voluntarily surrendered to the French during the Congress at Arras, or a little before. The Duke of Bedford having retaken St. Denys. razed the Walls to the Ground. Then he ordered Meulant to be invested; but the Bastard of Orleans raised the Siege. The Lord of Chatillon, Governor of Epernay for the English, being gone out of the Town, found the Gates shut up against him at his Return, and the Inhabitants called in the French.

The Treaty of Arras changes the Affairs of the English for the worse.

Isabella, Queen Dowager of France, seeing the flourishing Condition of the King her Son, whom she mortally hated, and the forlorn State of the English, died at Paris with Grief and Vexation, twelve Days after the Conclusion of the Treaty of Arras. She was universally hated by the French, who looked upon her as the principal Cause of the Ruin of the Kingdom. The English had no great Esteem

Death of Queen Isa-bella of Bavaria.

1435. Esteem for her; at least, they showed but little Regard for her, since she was become of no Service to them.

Death of the Duke of Bedford.

His Elogy.

Her Decease was of little Consequence to either of the Parties. But the Death of the Duke of Bedford, which happened on the 14th of the same Month at Roan, was quite another thing. It is very probable, that his Vexation at being thus imposed upon by King Charles and the Duke of Burgundy, was a great Means of throwing him into the Fit of Sicknefs of which he died, four Days before the Conclusion of the Treaty of Arras, the fatal News whereof he expected to hear every Moment. He foresaw with mortal Grief, that the Affairs of the King his Nephew were going to be reduced to a very wretched State, and without any Prospect of being ever restored. During the whole Course of his Administration, he had behaved with that Wisdom and Prudence, as justly made him pass for one of the greatest Men of his Time. His Valour and other martial Virtues shone with no less Lustre on all Occasions, where he commanded in Person. Had he been well assisted by England, he would, in all appearance, have ended the War to his own Glory and the young King's Advantage, since he wanted no Qualification proper to accomplish the greatest Enterprizes. But unfortunately for him, he saw himself abandoned when he stood most in need of Help. The only Thing they could tax him with, was his suffering himself to be over-reached in the Business of the Congress of Arras. But where is the Man that can always be upon his Guard against Treachery? Nothing better shows the Esteem the World ought to have of this illustrious Prince, than the Regard Lewis XI. Son of Charles VII. expressed for him, at a Time when he could have no Inducement to flatter him. Lewis being one Day in the Church of Roan, and looking upon the Duke of Bedford's Tomb *, a certain Lord of his Retinue advised him to demolish that standing

* He was buried in Notre Dame Church, under a plain Tomb of black Marble, with an Epitaph upon a Copper-Plate, and his Arms gartered betwixt two Orich-Feathers fixed upon a Pillar of the Church over it. Dugdale.

ing Monument of the Dishonour of the French, No, replied the King, Let the Ashes of a Prince rest in Peace, who were he alive would make the boldest of us tremble. I rather wish they had erected a more stately Monument to his Honour.

1435.

Immediately after the Death of the Duke of Bedford, the Duke of York was appointed Regent of France. But Henry Duke of Somerset who aspired to that Dignity, managed it so by his Intrigues that his Rival's Patent was deferred a good while. Apparently he was in hopes he should be able to get the Court to change in his Favour. This Delay proved extremely prejudicial to the King's Affairs, as will be seen in the Relation of the next Year's Occurrences.

The Duke of York appointed Regent of France.

All England was exceedingly enraged at the News of the Duke of Burgundy's Defection. They did not spare to give him the most opprobrious Names. Mean while the Duke being willing to show still some regard for Henry, sent two Heralds to make his Excuse for concluding a separate Peace, on Pretence that his Subjects were over-burdened by the Continuance of the War. This is the usual Pretence of all Peaces, though generally when a War is taken in Hand, the Interests of the poor People are little regarded. The Duke offered at the same Time his Mediation to Henry, if he had a Mind to conclude a Peace with King Charles. This Offer was looked upon as a fresh Insult. The Truth is, what could one have expected from the Mediation of a Prince who had just sacrificed so openly the Interests of England to his own Advantage? Therefore they vouchsafed not to answer his Letters, which besides were writ in a stile very different from what he was wont to use. His Heralds were received with Indignity. They had like to have violated the Law of Nations, and the Populace were within a Hair's Breadth of tearing in Pieces all the Flemings and Burgundians then in England, so incensed were they against their Prince. But in behaving thus, they could not do him a greater Piece of Service. He wanted a Pretence to join his Forces with the French, and he did not fail to find one in the Insults done to his Heralds.

1436.

The Duke of Burgundy tries to excuse himself in England.

He offers his Mediation.

It is rejected.

He declares against England.

1436. ralds and Subjects. Accordingly in the Month of May this very Year, he sent to the Constable Richmond five Hundred Lances, under the Command of the Earl of Lain, and by that openly declared himself an Enemy to the King of England.

The Constable approaches
Paris,

The Constable having joined these Succours to six or seven Thousand Men he had drawn together from other Places, approached Paris, where there was but fifteen Hundred English, under the Command of Sir Richard Woodville. Besides that this Garrison was very Weak to defend so large a City, the Constable held good Intelligence with the Inhabitants, who being almost all Friends of the Duke of Burgundy, had sided with England purely out of regard to that Prince. Whilst he remained firm to the King of England, Paris needed no other Guard but her own Citizens. But upon his declaring for King Charles, they all changed with him. So that it was no wonder if fifteen Hundred English could not keep them in Awe. The Death of the Duke of Bedford, the Absence of the new Regent, and the like Care that was taken to send Succours from England, disabling the English from keeping an Army in the Field, the Constable met with no Opposition in his March. He took several small Places near Paris, and slew five Hundred of a Detachment which the Governor had sent to St. Denys. Then he went and encamped up to the very Gates of Paris with his little Army. Whilst he lay there, continual Parleys were held between the Burghers and Besiegers, without the Governour being able to help it. At length, April the 13th the whole City rise in Arms, whilst the Marshal de L'isle Adam scaled the Walls. The Garrison advancing to repulse the Assault, found themselves pelted with a Shower of Stones from the Windows, whilst all the City resounded with Long live the King and the Duke of Burgundy. The Governour perceiving there was no standing against so many Enemies, chose to retire into the Bastile with all his People. Immediately all the Streets were chained for fear he should take it in his Head to return. In the mean Time L'isle Adam entered the City with Ease, and opened the Gates to the Constable. Thus Paris was taken from and takes it.

for King Charles by the same L'isle Adam who had surprized it seventeen Years before for the Duke of Burgundy, and much after the same Manner. The Bastile which might have held out a long Siege, if it had been well stored with Provisions, was so unprovided that it could hold out but three Days. It was very much that the Governour was able to obtain an honourable Capitulation.

1436.

As the Affairs of the English sensibly declined, the Council of England were extremely desirous of a Peace. In continuing the War in France, the Question was no longer about the Conquest of that Kingdom, as in the Reign of Henry V, and till the raising of the Siege of Orleans, but only about what the King of England could possibly keep, and the little they could expect to secure by a vigorous War cost England immense Sums. This was a plausible Reason enough to perswade the Publick that it was necessary to think in good earnest of a Peace. I say, a plausible Reason, because it was the real Motive which set the Council at Work. Some Time since the Cardinal of Winchester gained Ground upon the Duke of Gloucester his Rival. The Council by Degrees was filled with his Creatures, who no more than himself found their own private Account in the Continuance of the War, because it made them odious to the People, ever since it was attended with ill Success. Coin was grown exceeding scarce in England, and yet the Council was forced to be continually devising Means to raise Money, which could not be done without causing great Murmurings. On the other Hand, the Cardinal hoped he should be able to ruin his Enemy with more Ease during a Peace, because the War and the unforeseen Accidents of it, rendered the Person and Counsels of the Duke of Gloucester absolutely necessary. In fine, as the Duke was ever of Opinion that vigorous Endeavours should be used to recover what had been lost in France, this was an Argument for the opposite Party to insist with the same eagerness upon the Necessity of concluding a Peace. The Majority of the Council being of this Mind, the Duke of York, whose Commission to be Regent of France was at length signed, had Instructions and full Power to

England thinks of a Peace.

Instructions to the Duke of York.

1436. treat with King Charles if he found it practicable. Moreover upon the Prospect that a Negotiation would be set on Foot, the Council impowered the Cardinal of Winchester and the Duke of Burgundy jointly to treat about a Marriage between the King and one of his Adversary's Daughters.

He drives
the French out of Normandy.

Shortly after the Duke of York set out for France, and in Normandy landed a good Body of Troops, with which he took a great many small Places or Castles which the French had taken since the Death of the Duke of Bedford. Fescamp was among the Places the Regent recovered, but presently after it was carried again by Scalado.

The Duke of Burgundy prepares to besiege Calais.

Though the Duke of York was Master of the Field in Normandy and about Paris, he was not easy with respect to Picardy. He was informed from all Hands, that the Duke of Burgundy was drawing all his Forces together, and laying in a prodigious Store of all Things necessary for a Siege. Such great Preparations could be designed against Calais only, and therefore he sent Word to the Council of England, that they might provide betimes against the impending Siege. Indeed a powerful Fleet, a great Train of Artillery, and an Army of fifty Thousand Men, which the Duke of Burgundy had got ready, were clear Evidences how very desirous he was of succeeding in his Enterprize, and that he resolved to go through with it. News of this coming to England, the whole Nation was alarmed, and grew more incensed against the Duke of Burgundy. The Council in a Fright about Calais, the first Conquest of the English in France, resolved to use all possible Endeavours to save it. With this View they ordered fifteen Thousand Men to be raised, and petitioned the Duke of Gloucester to take upon him the Care of succouring that Place. Fifteen Thousand Men were little enough for such an Undertaking. But besides that, they reckoned the Regent would join the Duke of Gloucester with all his Forces, they knew that the Enemy's Army was made up almost entirely of the Militia of Flanders, which they made no great Account of.

A&C. Pub.
X, 645.

The Duke of Gloucester goes to its Relief.

Henry disposes of Bulloin and Flanders.
p. 652.

Whilst they were busy in levying Troops with the utmost Diligence, the King by the Advice of his Council, resolved to express his Relentment against the Duke of Bur- gundy,

gundy, by causing Letters under his Great Seal to be drawn up, whereby he bestowed the Earldom of Bulloin upon the Lord Beaumont, and Flanders upon the Duke of Gloucester. But it was easier to make Grants of them in Parchment, than to wrest them out of the Hands of the Possessor.

Every Thing being ready for the Departure of the Army designed for the Relief of Calais, the Duke of Gloucester set Sail and landed in Normandy in the Beginning of October. The Duke of Burgundy had now been before Calais six Weeks with his numerous Army. He carried on the Siege vigorously, and the Besieged made as brave a Defence. Mean time the Duke, who was in hopes of winning immortal Honour by taking one of the strongest Places in Europe, was yet very short of his Aim. He even began to perceive that the Attempt was beyond his Power. His Fleet, either by the Unskilfulness of the Pilots, or some other Accident, coming too near the Town at Low-Water, ran a Ground, and the Ships were reduced to Ashes before his Eyes by the Besieged. This was a very mortifying Sight. But a worse Accident befell him quickly after. A Rumour being spread in the Army that the Duke of Gloucester was at Hand to relieve the Town, the Flemings disheartened by the Hardships of the Siege, and terrified at the Approach of the English, packed up their Baggage and began to march off. In vain did the Duke use all possible Endeavours to remove their Fears. The Scouts of the English Army appearing in the mean Time, it was impracticable for the Duke to stop his frightened Troops, who sought only to avoid coming to a Battle. Whereupon the Duke seeing he could do nothing with them, was forced to follow them in their Retreat, which was made in great Disorder, though timely enough to prevent the English from taking the Advantage of it. He had the further Mortification to receive a Defiance from the Duke of Gloucester, offering him Battle, and not to have it in his Power to accept it, though his Army was much Superior to that of his Enemy. But this was not all. Hardly was he returned into his own Country but the Towns of Flanders revolted against him. He was even in Danger of losing his Life 1436.

The Duke of Gloucester comes before Calais.

The Duke of Burgundy's Army retires.

Insurrection in Flanders.

1436. Life at Bruges in a seditious Tumult of the Citizens. He was himself wounded, after seeing with Grief L'isle Adam torn in Pieces by the mutinous Populace. Mean Time the Duke of Gloucester improving this Juncture, over-ran Artois, Flanders, and Hainault, and carried off twelve Hundred Waggon-Loads of Booty. From thenceforward the Duke of Burgundy had so much upon his Hands at Home, that he was but of little Service to King Charles.

Marriage of Lewis the Dauphin.

In the Month of June this Year, Lewis the Dauphin Son of King Charles, had married Margaret of Scotland Daughter of James I, then about twelve Years of Age.

1437.
Death of the two Queen Dowagers of England.
Catharine marries Tudor.

The Beginning of the Year 1437 was remarkable for the Death of Joan of Navarre and Catharine of France, both Queen Dowagers of England, one Widow of Henry IV, the other of Henry V. The last had married Owen Tudor a Welsh Gentleman descended, as they pretend, from the ancient Kings of Wales. I do not know whether in those Days this Descent was much minded, or whether it was not after the Crown was devolved to the Family of the Tudors by the Accession of Henry VII to the Throne, that they endeavoured to make it out. However that be, when Queen Catharine married Owen Tudor, they seemed to be so ill-matched, that all England was offended at it, especially as it was done without the Knowledge of the Duke of Gloucester, who was then Protector. But the Veneration that Prince had for the Memory of the King his Brother, with-held him from giving the Queen his Sister-in-law any Trouble about it. As soon as she was dead, the Council had not the same Regard for her second Husband. They thought it their Duty to punish him for his Temerity in daring to espouse the King's Mother, without the Consent of those who governed the Kingdom, and ordered him to be sent to the Tower. Some Time after Tudor made his Escape, but he was taken and put under closer Confinement. Some say, he found means to escape a second Time, but being retaken, had his Head cut off. Others affirm, that he was not beheaded till 1460, upon his being made Prisoner of War, fighting for the House of Lancaster. I do not know whether it be certain that Tudor was put

A&C. Pub.
K. 685.
Tudor is sent to the Tower after the Queen's Death.

Death; but one may venture to affirm, that they who tell us it was in 1460, were guilty of an Error, by taking Owen Tudor his third Son, for Owen Tudor the Father. 1436.

Tudor had by Queen Catharine three Sons, Edmund, Jasper and Owen. The Eldest was created Earl of Richmond * by Henry VI. his Half-Brother, who gave him to Wife Margaret, only Daughter of John Duke of Somerset. From this Marriage sprung Henry Earl of Richmond, whom we shall see hereafter ascend the Throne of England, under the Name of Henry VII. all the Male-Heirs of the House of Lancaster being extinct. Jasper the Second Son was made Earl of Pembroke *. Owen the Youngest, lost his Head on the Scaffold in 1460.

Tudor's Issue by Queen Catharine.

Jaqueline of Luxemburg, Widow of the Duke of Bedford, followed the Example of Queen Catharine. After the Death of the Prince her Husband, she married Sir Richard Woodville, who was only a Knight, and much below her. This Match was hardly any better than that of Queen Catharine: Besides, it was made not only without the King's Licence, but also contrary to the express Oath Jaqueline had taken not to marry without his Leave. So that both the Bride and Bridegroom would have been liable to the Rigour of the Law, had not the King been pleased to pardon them ².

Second Marriage of the Dutchess of Bedford.
p. 678.

On the 19th of February, James I. of Scotland was murdered in his Bed by Assassins suborned by the Earl of Athol his Uncle. James II. his Son, seven Years old, succeeded him, under the Guardianship of Joan of Somerset his Mother, who was herself wounded, by endeavouring to save the King her Husband. It is time now to return to what was doing in France.

1437.
Death of the King of Scotland.

Since

* Edmund of Hadham was created Earl of Richmond, 31 Henry VI. November 23. at Reading. Dugdale.

*¹ Jasper of Hatfield was created at the same Time Earl of Pembroke, and afterwards 1 Henry VII. October 27. Duke of Bedford. Dug.

*² He gave a Thousand Pound Fine for that and the Livery of her Dowry. He was created Earl of Rivers, 26 Henry VI. May. 29. Dugd.

1437.
The Affairs of the English in France begin to have a better Face.

Since the Arrival of the Duke of York from England, the Affairs of the English began to be upon a better Foot. King Charles, ever a Slave to his Pleasures, had no considerable Body of Troops in the Field; and the Revolt of the Flemings hindered the Duke of Burgundy from sending him any Succours. It is true, the Towns that had voluntarily surrendered to him had strengthened his Party considerably; but then his Army was much weakened by it, on account of the Garrisons he was obliged to keep there. As Matters then stood in France, both Kings had almost equal Reason to fear the Disloyalty of their Adherents, who for the most Part were attached rather to the Fortune of him they served, than to his Person, or the Justice of his Cause. And therefore the keeping the Towns they were possessed of, entirely depended on the Strength of the Garrisons.

Talbot takes Pontoise.

The first Part of this Year was so excessive cold, that the Generals of both Sides seemed to have no desire to form any Enterprize till the Weather became warmer. Mean while Talbot, who found nothing impossible, knew how to take Advantage of the Security the French were in by reason of the Sharpness of the Season. On Shrove-Tuesday at Night he scaled Pontoise, by help of the Ditches being frozen over, and carried it, whilst the Garrison and Townsmen were minding only their Diversions. The taking of this important Place was a great Blow to King Charles. Especially it very much galled the Parisians, who were exposed to the continual Incursions which the new Garrison made up to the very Gates of Paris.

The French made themselves some amends for this Loss, by the gaining of Dreux and Chrevrense, which were sold to them by the Governors.

The Duke
of Burgundy rouses K. Charles.

The Superiority the English had just recovered in France, made the Duke of Burgundy apprehensive of some fatal Turn. He was very sensible that without his Aid King Charles would never be able to put an end to the War; and since he had openly declared against the English, it was his Interest to see to drive them quite out of the Kingdom. Mean time, he thought it a sad Thing to act alone for the Benefit of a Prince, whose Indolence kept him at a Distance from

from all Enterprizes, wherein he should have been the foremost. The Duke, designing therefore to rouse him from his Lethargy, represented to him, that his Honour and Interest called upon him to draw together all his Forces, put himself at their Head, and approach Paris, in order to drive the Enemy out of the Heart of the Kingdom. At the same time he offered to make a powerful Diversion in Picardy to favour his Undertaking.

Never was Prince less inclined to War than Charles VII. and yet never did King of France make greater Conquests than he, since he may be said to conquer his whole Kingdom. But it was chiefly owing to his Generals, who for the most Part were Men of eminent Merit. The Remonstrances and Offers of the Duke of Burgundy having raised him from his Sloth, he drew all his Forces together, in order to approach Paris, where he was very much wanted. By the way he attacked Montereau-Faut-Tonne, where the late Duke of Burgundy was murdered, whilst on his Side the Duke of Burgundy besieged Crotoy, a strong Place in Picardy.

Charles heads his Army.

It was about the End of August that the Duke of Burgundy invested Crotoy with a strong Army, whilst four French Ships blocked up the Place by Sea. The Duke of York having been recalled into England by the Intrigues of the Duke of Somerset his Enemy, was about to depart, staying only for the Arrival of the Earl of Warwick, who was to succeed him in the Regency. This was the Reason, that not being able to take upon him to relieve Crotoy in Person, he commissioned the brave Talbot for that Purpose, whose Name alone was sufficient to strike Terror into the Enemies of the English. Talbot, at the Head of five Thousand Men, boldly advanced towards Crotoy, with design to relieve it, though the River Somme was betwixt him, and the Duke of Burgundy incamped round the Town, which was situated on the other Side. As soon as the Duke was informed of his coming, he left Part of his Troops at the Siege, and with the rest went and posted himself on the River-side, on purpose to dispute his Passage. The Hatred the English had conceived against that Prince was Crotoy invested by the Duke of Burgundy.

Act. Pub.
X. 674.

Talbot goes to relieve it.

1437.
A bold Action of that General.

The Siege is raised.

so violent, that they thought nothing impracticable when the Business was to be revenged upon him. Talbot, taking advantage of the Temper they were in, rushed first into the River Sword in Hand, and by his Intrepidity inspired his Troops with such Courage, that they instantly followed him. The more bold or rather rash this Action was, the more it wrought upon the Minds of the Burgundians, who imagining they had to deal with Devils rather than Men, took to their Heels without staying their coming. Their Terror having infected the rest that were left behind at the Siege, the whole Army ran away, and it was not in the Duke of Burgundy's Power to rally them. At the same Time the Duke of York appeared with seven Men of War in sight of the four French Ships, and gave them chase so briskly, that it was with great Difficulty that they escaped to St. Valery. Talbot entered the Town in Triumph; and having ordered the Trenches of the Besiegers to be levelled, marched back to Normandy. In his Return he conquered five or six small Places in Picardy; and after retaking once more Tancarville in Normandy, he came again loaded with Honour to Roan.

Success of the Siege of Montereau

The Siege of Montereau had not so happy an Issue, though the English came off with Glory. Thomas Gerard Governor of that Place, defended it a good while, maugre the vigorous Effects of the Besiegers, though he had but Four Hundred Men. Hitherto King Charles was not very eminent for his Valour: but at this Siege he performed such Exploits, as began to give a higher Idea of his Courage. After a pretty long Siege, he carried the Town by Storm, having been himself one of the first to mount the Breach, and fight Hand to Hand with those that defended it. Without doubt he had been given to understand, that it was necessary to procure the Esteem of his Subjects by some extraordinary Action. The Intrepidity he showed upon this Occasion turned greatly to his Account. From thenceforward, his Friends as well as his Enemies, beheld him with a different Eye from what they had done before. Mean while, the Garrison being retired into the Castle, a second Siege was to be carried on. Charles satisfied satisfied with the Honour he had atchieved in the First, and it may be sick of the Hardships he had undergone, left the Management of it to the Dauphin his Son. Gerard, who was no less brave than experienced, held out fifteen Days longer, after which he was forced to capitulate. When he came before the Dauphin, he very politely told him, that against any other but him he should have been able to make a longer Defence. This Compliment was taken very well by the young Prince, who was pleased to see himself set in some measure above the King his Father. But Charles, who was told of it, seemed to be extremely mortified at it. It is said, he began from thenceforward to entertain against the Prince his Son a Jealousy, which proved very fatal to him afterwards.

Whilst the War was thus carrying on in France, the Duke of Orleans, Prisoner in England, was thinking of Means to obtain his Liberty. Nothing but a Peace between the two Kings could possibly bring that about. And therefore no body was more concerned than he, to endeavour to set on Foot a fresh Negotiation. With this view it was that he demanded Leave to go and talk in Person with the Duke of Breagne at Calais, who was looked on then as the only Prince that could be employed as Mediator. The Council, who were all inclined to Peace, would have readily granted his Demand; but it was judged necessary to see first how Charles was disposed in that respect. Besides, the Duke of Gloucester was of Opinion, that a Peace ought not to be thought of till they were in Condition to make an advantageous one.

The Duke of Orleans is appointed Mediator between the two Kings.

Mean while, as the King advanced in Age, the Credit of the Duke his Uncle sensibly diminished, and that of the Cardinal of Winchester daily increased. The Cardinal had a great Advantage upon his Adversary, in that his Riches enabled him frequently to lend the King Money. The Kingdom was so exhausted, that Aids of that kind were considered as the greatest Service a Man could then do the State. He knew how to make the best of the Temper the King was in with regard to him, in order to prevent any fresh Attacks from the Duke of Gloucester. By Letters

The Cardinal gains ground upon the Duke of Gloucester.

1437.
Act. Pub.
X. 679.

under the Great Seal the King granted him a general Pardon for all Offences whatever, from the Beginning of the World to the 28th of June 1437. By this Means he disarmed his Enemy of all Pretence to attack him.

1438.
Plague and Famine in England
and France

The Year 1438 abounded with few remarkable Events. A terrible Famine, which ravaged at the same Time France and England, and was followed by a Plague, prevented the Generals on both Sides from forming any great Undertakings. Attempts there were however, some whereof succeeded not, and others were of little Moment. I shall therefore take notice of the most remarkable only. Gurienne, Governor of Montargis for the English, finding himself surrounded with the Enemy's Towns, and receiving no Succours from England, surrendered that Place to the French for Ten Thousand Salutes of Gold (a). In the present Posture of the Affairs of the English, Montargis was of little Importance to them, since they could not possibly carry the War from that Quarter. Shortly after, Edmund Earl of Mortagne, Brother of the Duke of Somerset, having brought some Troops from England and joined Talbot, they made some inconsiderable Conquests in Normandy.

The Duke
of Burgundy makes another Attempt upon Calais.

Act. Pub.
X. 686.

He misses his Aim.

The Disgrace which the Duke of Burgundy had received at Calais sat hard upon his Mind, and he wanted to retrieve his Honour by taking that Place. But as this could not easily be done by a Siege in Form, he went another way to work. He had been told, that by digging through a certain Bank the Town would be infallibly overflowed; and by standing ready at Hand with a good Body of Troops, it would be an easy matter to enter the Place, amidst the Consternation the Garrison and Inhabitants would be in. The Project was put in Execution. But the Sea being lower than the Town, all the Water ran out. The Duke having missed his Aim, resolved to attempt the Siege of Guisnes. But the Earl of Huntington, who came in the very Nick of Time from England with a Supply of Troops, constrained him him to retire. The Troubles in Flanders which broke out afresh soon after, found him so much Work for some Years, that he had no leisure to form any new Designs against the English.

(a) A Piece of Money worth about 15 Pence Tournois. (See Note in the Life of Henry V.)

1438.

The Dauphin's Marriage had raised such a Jealousy in the English, that after several Insults on both Sides, England and Scotland were come at length to an open Rupture. Mean while the Minority of James II. and the favourable Disposition of the Queen-Mother towards the English her Countrymen, procured a nine Years Truce from the 1st of May this Year.

Truce renewed with Scotland.

John and Thomas Beaufort, Brothers of the Duke of Somerset, having been a long Time Prisoners in France *, several Tryals had been made to get them exchanged for others of the French; but there was always some Obstacle in the way. By Articles of Agreement made in 1430 with the Duke of Bourbon, that Prince had engaged to get them released without Ransom. But as these Articles had been never executed, they still remained Prisoners. I do not know what became of Thomas who bore the Title of Earl of Perth. It may be he died during his Captivity. But this Year John was exchanged for the Earl of Eu of the House of Artois, who was Prisoner in England since the Battle of Azincourt. He was afterwards created Duke of Somerset, upon the Death of Henry his elder Brother. There was also a fourth Brother named Edmund who succeeded them, and of whom I shall have a great deal to say in the Sequel of this Reign.

The Duke of Somerset's Brother exchanged for the Earl of Eu.

Act. Pub. X. 680.

The Famine and Plague ceasing in England and France, both Sides took up Arms again. In the Month of March 1439, the Constable Richmond putting himself at the Head of a pretty numerous Army, went and laid Siege to Meaux, one of the strongest Places in France, which had formerly held out seven Months against Henry V. The Bastard of Han, an Officer of distinguished Valour, who was Governor, made so brave a Defence as astonished the Constable. However, after a three Weeks Siege the City was taken 1439. The Constable Richmond besieges Meaux and takes it by Storm.

* At the Battle of Bauge wherein Clarence was killed.

1439.

He continues the Siege of the Marché.

taken by Storm. But the Work was but half done, seeing the Garrison was retired into the Marché (so that Part of the City is called which is separated from the other Part by the Marne.) The English having broke down the Bridge of Communication, the Constable saw himself forced to begin on the other Side of the River a second Siege much more difficult than the first. The same Thing happened to Henry V when he besieged that Place. Mean Time the Constable having taken the Governour Prisoner in the Assault, cut off his Head because he was a Frenchman. This is what King Charles's Generals had not yet ventured to do, by Reason of the great Number of Prisoners in the Hands of the English. But as soon as they found themselves strongest, they overlooked that Consideration, being no longer afraid of Reprisals.

Talbot throws in Succours ;

The Siege of the Marché of Meaux growing every Day more difficult, the Constable drew round his Camp Lines with Redoubts to prevent all Succours, and the King came himself to the Army, that he might animate the Troops by his Presence. Mean while Talbot, who did not question but the Besieged would make a long Resistance, had already prepared Succours. How difficult soever this Undertaking appeared, he attempted it however. The Obstacles which he foresaw served only to spur him on the more. With a good Body of choice Troops he boldly advanced towards the Besiegers Lines, and having attacked Sword in Hand and carried one of the Redoubts which obstructed his Passage, he entered the Place with a Convoy. On the Morrow he got out again whilst the Besiegers were still dismayed at the Action of the Day before, and went to prepare fresh Succours. But the Constable vexed at receiving such a Disgrace from a Handful of Men, pressed the Place so vigorously that he put the Garrison under a Necessity to capitulate before the Succours could be ready.

but the Place is taken.

He raises the Siege of Avranches,

The Siege of Avranches which the Constable undertook after that of Meaux, did not end so well for him. Having sat down three Weeks before that Place, Talbot with the Troops he had prepared for the Relief of Meaux, attacked and and forced the Lines of the Besiegers, and supplied the Town with Provisions. 1439.

After this Exploit, Talbot finding that the French were dismayed, and their Troops so much weakened that they were not able to withstand him, he went and appeared before Harfleur. As his Army was not strong enough to form a Siege, he chose to block up the Town. To that End, he intrenched himself in an advantageous Post, in such a manner that an Army of fifty Thousand Men was not capable of forcing his Trenches. In the mean Time, the Duke of Somerset kept the Place blocked up by Sea. The Earl of Eu, lately arrived from England where he had been long a Prisoner, approached with Design to attack the Intrenchments of the English. But perceiving it impracticable, he chose to retire, after a faint Attempt, wherein Gauconr was made Prisoner. At length, after a four Months Blockade, Talbot became Master of this important Place which had been the first Conquest of Henry V. This done, he cleared Normandy of the Garrisons which the French still kept in divers Castles: So that they had nothing left in that Province but the Town of Dieppe only.

The Duke of Burgundy beheld with Grief that the Affairs of the English began to be restored, and dreaded the Consequences. King Charles waged War in a very careless manner. It was with much ado that they could prevail with him to head his Army. Besides, France was so ruined, that he could draw but few Succours from the Provinces he was possessed of. On the other Hand, the War in Flanders which wholly took up the Duke of Burgundy, gave but little Prospect of any Aids from thence. If the English had then exerted themselves to any Degree, in all likelihood they would have recovered a great deal of Ground. But either out of Blindness or Inability, they did Things by Halves, contenting themselves with sending from Time to Time inconsiderable Succours which were incapable of making them regain what they had lost. Thus on both Sides it was easily seen that the War would be without End, if it was to last till one of the two Kings had lost, one after another, the Places he was Master of. This Consideration and goes and besieges Harfleur.

Disposition of the Duke of Burgundy.

1479. sideration was of such weight with the Duke of Burgundy, that he took a Resolution either to procure a Peace, if possible, between the two Kings, or to screen himself by standing Neuter. A Design of this Nature was to be managed with a great deal of Prudence and Caution, for fear, both Parties should strike up a Peace to his Disadvantage, or the English stand more upon the Reserve if they knew his Intention.

They begin to talk of Peace.

Whilst the Duke of Burgundy was taken up with these Thoughts, the Pope exhorted the two Kings, by the Cardinal of Santa Cruz, to put a stop to the Effusion of Christian Blood spilt in their Quarrel. At the same Time he writ to the Duke of Bretagne, desiring him to be Mediator of Peace. The Duke having sent to both Kings, found them equally inclined to enter upon a Treaty, and the Duke of Burgundy received the Proposal with Joy. The Duke of Orleans took this Opportunity to offer his Mediation to the King of England, jointly with the Duke of Bretagne, and to that End he renewed his Instances for Leave to go and confer with the Duke at Calais. This was granted him, though the Duke of Gloucester opposed it with all his Might, because he plainly saw that Prince could not be an impartial Mediator. But for some Time past the Duke of Gloucester had lost his Interest in the Council, where they even affected upon all Occasions to proceed contrary to his Opinion. Besides, the Counsellors were so desirous of Peace, that they forgot, or else had a Mind to forget, that the false Step which was made in sending Ambassadors to Arras was entirely owing to the vain Hopes the Duke of Orleans had given. The captive Prince therefore was looked upon as a disinterested Mediator, though it was easy to perceive he was entirely biassed in Favour of King Charles. The Duke of Burgundy saw with Pleasure that a Conference was going forward, which would either End in a Peace between the two Kings, or afford him a Handle to conclude a separate Truce with England. The two Courts being in this Temper, Commissioners were appointed on both Sides to settle the Preliminary Articles of the Congress. These Commissioners being met, judged that in order to bring the the Treaty to a good Issue, a Truce was absolutely necessary. Whereupon Henry impowered his to agree to one. But some Obstacles occurred which hindered it from being concluded. What has been said concerning a Peace was transacted the Year before 1438. But I thought it best to defer speaking of it till now, that I might not be obliged to break off the Recital of what relates to this Affair.

1439.

In the Month of January 1439, Isabella of Portugal Dutchess of Burgundy, and the Cardinal of Winchester conferred together between Calais and Graveline. The Result of their Conference was, that the two Kings should appoint a proper Place to treat about a Peace, with the Mediation of the Dukes of Bretagne and Orleans, and that they should send their Plenipotentiaries thither. Pursuant to this Agreement, the very Place where the Dutchess and Cardinal met was pitched upon, and Ambassadors were nominated on both Sides. They were all chosen out of the Princes and greatest Lords of the two Kingdoms. But before we proceed to the Issue of this Congress, it will not be amiss to see how the Council of England stood disposed in regard to Peace. Now this evidently appears in the Ambassadors Instructions extant in the Collection of Publick Acts. Hence we shall be able to judge which of the two Parties is to be blamed for breaking off the Conference, and likewise to rectify several Mistakes which Historians are guilty of in this Matter.

The Place of Congress appointed; p. 718. The Duke of Bretagne, and Orleans Mediators.

In the first Place, the Ambassadors were ordered to demand, that the King's Adversary should leave him in peaceable Possession of the whole Realm of France. They were to back this Demand with several Reasons mentioned in the Instructions, too long to be inserted here. Besides the Reader is well enough acquainted with the Grounds the Kings of England built their Pretensions upon.

Instructions given to the English Ambassadors.

II. If the French should exclaim against this Demand, and think it unreasonable, the Ambassadors after a previous Protestation were to offer Charles the Provinces beyond the Loire which were held immediately of the Crown, but on Condition of Homage.

1439.

III. If the Adversaries rejected this Offer, the Cardinal of Winchester, as a Clergyman, was to lay before their Eyes such Considerations as were proper to perswade the two Nations to Peace. These Considerations being very many and long, I shall content my self with just touching upon three of the Principal. The first was, that the War which had been taken in Hand for the Title of King of France, which each of the two Kings laid Claim to, had destroyed more Men then were left at that present Time in both Kingdoms. The second was, that the two Princes ought seriously to consider that God made not the People for the Sovereign, but the Sovereign for the People; that is to say, to govern them with Justice and Peace, to the end the Subjects may be the better able to serve him. The Third was, that France had not always been governed by one single Monarch, but that before and after Charlemain, there were often two, sometimes three, nay four Kings at the same Time.

IV. This third Consideration was in order to make Room for another Offer which the Ambassadors had Power to tender, namely, that Henry would give up to Charles all the Provinces beyond the Loire in full Sovereignty. He excepted however in exprels Terms Guienne, Poitou, and all that his Ancestors had held in France before they came to the Crown of England.

V. If this Offer was rejected, the Ambassadors had Power to offer from the King their Master, that he would be satisfied with what his Ancestors had enjoyed in France by Right of Inheritance, provided they would throw in Calais, Guisnes, and the adjacent Marches, the whole in full Sovereignty without any Dependence upon the Crown of France, or any Person whatsoever but God alone.

VI. If the French insisted that Normandy should be restored to Charles in the State it was in before the Conquest of it by Henry V, that is, notwithstanding the Grants of several Lordships made to private Persons, as well by the late as the present King, rather than break off the Conference the Ambassadors were to allow this Article.

VII. If

VII. If Matters were brought to that Point, that Charles would be contented with this Offer, provided Henry would quit the Title of King of France; in that Case the Instructions furnished the Plenipotentiaries with abundance of Reasons and Arguments, to be alledged against that Proviso. But in fine, they had Orders to leave this Matter to the Cardinal of Winchester, to whom the King had made known his Pleasure.

It is manifest the Council had resolved to submit to that, if the Peace could not be made otherwise. For if Henry had absolutely been unwilling to quit the Title of King of France, there was no need of private Instructions, but the Ambassadors would have had exprefs Orders to reject the Condition.

The VIIIth Article was about a Propofal of a Match between the King and one of Charles's Daughters.

IX. If the French rejected all these Offers, and made any Propofals on their Part, the Ambassadors, without agreeing to or rejecting them, were to reply, that they had no Instructions to treat of a Peace upon those Grounds, but would acquaint their Master with them.

X. Mean while they were to get the Dutcheſs of Burgundy or the Duke of Orleans to propoſe a fifty Years Truce, with a free Communication between the two Nations. They had likewise Power to reduce the Truce to Forty, Thirty, or Twenty Years. And rather than fail they might limit it to three Years, provided it was to be without Communication, and to carry it even to eight upon the ſame Condition.

XI. In Caſe the Truce was accepted, they were to reſent that in order to the better Obſervance of it, it would be proper to make an Exchange of ſome Places. To that End, they were ordered to offer Meaux, Creil, St. Germain in Laye, which were in the Hands of the Engliſh when theſe Instructions were drawn up, in lieu of Dieppe, le Mont St. Michel, and Harfleur, which Talbot had not yet got Poſſeſſion of.

1439.

XII. Lastly, The King willing to facilitate the Exchange of these Places, agreed to release the Duke of Orleans for a Ransom of a Hundred Thousand Marks, and to abate Fifty Thousand on the Score of the Exchange proposed.

These Instructions were drawn up May the 31st, 1439. If we had likewise those of Charles's Plenipotentiaries, perhaps we should find that the two Kings were not at so great a Distance from one another, as they seemed to be at the Congress. But as upon these Occasions, the main Care of the Managers is to be upon their Guard, for fear their secret Instructions should be dived into, it often happens that the Negotiation is broke off before they have had Occasion to discover what they are impowered to offer, so much afraid are they of giving their Adversaries any Advantage. This was exactly the Case in the present Treaty, The English did not think proper to go beyond the second Article of their Instructions, namely, that Charles should have the Provinces beyond the Loire, on Condition he would do Homage to Henry. They expected that the French would give them room by their Offers to make some further Advances. For the same Reason the French kept to the Proposals they had made at the Congress of Arras, to wit, that their Master remaining sole King of France, would give up Guienne and Normandy to Henry on Condition of Homage. They cried up this Offer too much, and the Condescension of Charles, in being pleased to stand to what he had offered at the Congress of Arras, though he had since made great Conquests, and was become Master of Paris.

The Conference breaks up.

It was impossible a Peace could be concluded upon the Foot it was proposed by both Sides. Each of the Parties offered not to yield up but what was not in his Power, and by virtue of his pretended Cession, he expected the other should devest himself of what he actually possessed. This was properly to desire to get by the Dash of a Pen what they could not hope to obtain, but by many successful Sieges and Battles. So that, after the Ambassadors of the two Kings had long tried to dive into one another's Instructions,

in

in order to see how far their Adversaries were allowed to go, they parted without coming to any Conclusion. Each Party was willing to wait, till there was room given to make more reasonable Proposals, 1439.

The Duke of Burgundy and Orleans were the only Gainers by this Congress. The first had a mind, at any rate to ease his Subjects in Flanders, Brabant, Holland, Zeland, who were great Sufferers by the Interruption of their Commerce with England. With this view he set his Dutcheſs to work, who being a near Relation of Henry, was not suspected by the English. Under colour of doing the Office of a Mediatrix between the two Kings, she had frequent Conferences with the Cardinal of Winchester, and negotiated a Trading-Truce between England and the Low-Countries. This appears by several Pieces in the Collection of Publick Acts. Accordingly a Truce was made presently after.

A& Pub.
X. 713, 730, 736.

But the Duke of Orleans was he that reaped the most Benefit from the late Congress, since it procured him his Liberty after a Twenty-five Years Captivity. It has been frequently observed, that there were two Parties in the Court of England, namely, the Duke of Gloucester's and the Cardinal of Winchester's, and that the latter gradually gained ground, since the King began to have some Knowledge of his own Affairs. This Prince, having now attained to the Age of Eighteen Years, had a very narrow Genius, and was not at all like his Father. He easily suffered himself to be governed by those about him. So far was he from having the Presumption very common in young Princes, he was ever distrustful of himself, and chose rather to follow the Counsels of others than his own. With this Infirmary he was endowed with Principles of Honour, Virtue and Religion, which indeed made him wish he could always act with Justice, but which served for Foundation and Pretence] to his Counsellors, to draw him into many unjust Things. As he wanted Penetration, he suffered himself to be carried away with Appearances. This was what his Ministers knew very well how to take Advantage of, assured as they were that he was incapable of discerning 1440.

The Temper of Henry and his Court.

1440.

discerning their Self-interested Counsels. During his Youth he had contracted a Habit of blindly following the Suggestions of the Duke of Gloucester his Uncle, who governed in his Name. But when he was arrived to a more advanced Age, the Cardinal of Winchester and his Party hinted to him, that his Uncle intended to keep him always a Minor, and that he had Designs destructive of his Quiet. These Insinuations frequently repeated, had at length the Effect the Duke's Enemies expected. By degrees the King had such an Aversion for his Uncle, that he would no longer mind him. They made it their Business to mortify him upon all Occasions. His proposing any thing in Council was enough to have it strongly opposed, and the King generally countenanced the contrary Party to the Duke, from the Apprehension he was under of giving him room to execute the pretended Design of keeping him in Subjection. Such for some time past was the Temper of the King and Court.

The Duke of Gloucester is against releasing the Duke of Orleans;

The Duke of Gloucester had all along been against releasing the Duke of Orleans. The late King his Brother's Will was to him an inviolable Law: Besides, he was persuaded that the giving Orleans his Liberty, would serve only to augment the Number of the Enemies of England. But his Opposition was of no great weight; on the contrary, that alone was sufficient to induce his Enemies to favour the Duke of Orleans, supposing they should have had no other reason. We have seen what the Duke offered before the Congress of Arras. The Duke of Bedford and the Council had accepted his Offers, which seemed to be very advantagious, because the Drift of them had not yet been discovered. Since the Treaty of Arras he had sat still, perceiving it was not a proper Time to sollicite his Liberty. But when he saw that they began to talk of a Peace, he renewed his Instances, and offered to become Mediator jointly with the Duke of Bretagne. He met at the Council-Board with the same Countenance he had found there before, and in spite of the Duke of Gloucester's Opposition, they resolved to accept of his Mediation, and to treat with him afterwards about his Liberty. He had Leave therefore to repair to the Congress, where he appeared very zealous

Who is chosen one of the Mediators of a Peace.
Act. Pub.
X. 729.

1440.

lous to procure a Peace between the two Kings, and by the Help of the Dutcheſs of Burgundy, found Means to be reconciled with the Duke her Husband. The Cardinal being returned to England, ſpoke very much to his Advantage, and repreſented to the Council, that ſince it was not long of him that the Peace was not concluded, it was unreaſonable that he ſhould be a Sufferer by the Rupture. His Friends improved on this Occaſion the two Reaſons already made uſe of, in order to colour the Favour which was deſigned to be granted him. The Firſt was, that the Diſſention between the Dukes of Orleans and Burgundy might kindle afreſh, and turn very much to the Advantage of the Engliſh. The Second, that the captive Prince might be obliged to pay a large Ransom, which would help to carry on the War. In fine, they gave to underſtand, that he would be obliged to take an Oath to the King, and by that means be tied up from aſſiſting King Charles. So that in ſpite of all the Duke of Glouceſter could ſay, it was reſolved to treat with him about his Liberty.

This Reſolution being taken, the Duke of Glouceſter thought himſelf bound, both in Duty and for his own Security, to enter a Proteſtation in Form, in order to let the Publick ſee that he oppoſed it to the utmoſt of his Power. The Proteſtation contained the Reaſons why he believed that the Council's Reſolution might be very prejudicial to the King and State. Though it be ſomewhat long, it will be neceſſary to give the Subſtance of it here, becauſe it may be of Service in clearing ſeveral Facts: Beſides, it ſhows the Diſpoſition of the Members of the Council, who, to mortify the Duke, ſcrupled not to ſacrifice the King's Interests to their Paſſion. The Knowledge of this is the more requiſite, as it will appear by the Sequel, that to the fatal Enmity between the Duke and the Cardinal, is to be aſcribed the unfortunate Iſſue of the War in France. The Sum of the Duke's Proteſtation was as follows:

The Duke of Gloucester protests against the Resolution of the Council.

“ My firſt Reaſon for being againſt the Enlargement of “ the Duke of Orleans, is taken from the Inability of “ King Charles and the Dauphin his Son, known to all the “ World.

The Proteſtation.
 Act. Pub.
 X. 764.

1440.

“ World. Therefore, considering the pliant and subtle “ Genius of the Duke of Orleans, it is to be presumed that “ the States of France will entrust him with the Admini“ stration of the Affairs of the Kingdom. Now nothing “ could happen more hurtful to England, seeing that Prince “ has acquired a perfect Knowledge of the strong and “ weak Side of the Kingdom, during a Twenty-five Years “ abode among us.

II. “ The Dissention between King Charles and the “ Dauphin his Son, being a Secret to no body, it ought “ to be feared, as it is but too apparent, that the Duke of “ Orleans when in France, will be a proper Mediator to “ make them Friends.

III. “ Normandy being the Province which helps the “ most towards carrying on the War, it is to be feared “ that the Normans, seeing that the Succours so often pro“ mised both by Word of Mouth and Letter are not sent,
 “ and that on the other Hand, the Duke of Orleans is re“ leased, will imagine that one intends to abandon them as “ well as the rest of the Conquests. As to its being said, “ that Twenty Thousand Marks may be taken out of the “ Duke of Orleans’s Ransom for the Defence of that Pro“ vince, I leave it to be considered, whether that Sum is “ sufficient for that Purpose.

IV. “ The King and Council are very sensible that the “ Duke of Orleans acknowledges King Charles for his So“ vereign. Let it be considered then, whether having ta“ ken two opposite Oaths, one to a Prince whom he looks “ upon as a Foreigner, the other to him whom he believes “ to be his lawful King; he will chuse to keep the first “ rather than the last. This is so much the more impro“ bable, as he will always regard the first as extorted from “ him, whilst he was actually a Prisoner; and as he cannot “ moreover stand to it, without forfeiting his Possessions
 “ in France.

V. “ It would be proper to see what Remedy may be “ had, in case he breaks his Oath, under colour of obeying
 “ the absolute Command of his Sovereign.

VI. “ The

VI. “ The Earl of Huntington, who commands in “ Guienne, will in all likelihood be obliged to quit his Go“ vernment, because the King stands not to what was pro“ mised him by Agreement. That Province being thus “ abandoned, and the Duke of Orleans being in Alliance “ with the Houses of Albret and Armagnac, it should at “ least be considered how one shall defend that antient In“ heritance of the King, in case the Duke of Orleans joins “ Forces with those two Houses.

VII. “ The King has no Ally in all Europe but only “ the King of Portugal. Now if he has a mind to make “ Alliances with other Princes, how shall they be brought “ to hearken to his Proposals, when they shall come to “ know that he had no other way to preserve the Conquests
 “ of the King his Father, but by setting at Liberty one “ of his mortal Enemies?

VIII. “ The Reconciliation between the Duke of Or- “ leans and Burgundy lately at Calais, ought to make it “ feared, that they will join their Forces to drive the Eng- “ lish out of France, as they certainly may do unless God “ interposes; so far are we from having the Prospect of any “ Advantage by their Dissention. If any stress is laid “ upon the Oath which the Duke of Orleans is to take “ before he leaves England, let a Man examine by the Civil “ Laws how far the Oath of a Prisoner is to be depended “ upon.

IX. “ If any of the Princes or Lords who serve the “ King in France shall chance to fall into the Enemies “ Hands, as it may easily happen, four or five might be “ exchanged for the Duke of Orleans alone. But in case “ that Prince is released, the English Princes and Lords “ cannot fight for the King without being liable to utter “ Ruin.

X. “ If, as it is apparent, the Enlargement of the Duke “ of Orleans occasions the Loss of Normandy, and the “ rest of the King's Dominions in France, what will the “ King's Counsellors be able to say for themselves? What “ Murmurings will there not be among the People, when “ it shall be considered that these Conquests, purchased with 1440. “ the Lives of the late King, the Duke of Clarence, the “ Duke of Bedford, and an infinite Number of Princes, “ Lords and Gentlemen, were all lost by this fatal Step ?

XI. “ Lastly, Every one knows that the late King, “ wisely weighing the Danger which would arise from the “ Enlargement of the Duke of Orleans, forbade upon his “ Death-bed to release that Prince till a Peace was con“ cluded.

“ And as it may happen that after my Death I may be “ accused of consenting to this Resolution, I humbly en“ treat the King that this my Protestation may be recorded,
 “ and that I may have an authentick Copy under the “ Great Seal, to serve for my Justification”.

The Council persists in their Resolution.

The Duke of Gloucester's Request was granted : but his Protestation did not hinder the Resolution of the Council from being put in Execution. The 2d of July the Articles agreed upon for the Enlargement of the Duke of Or- leans were signed by the King and the Duke, the Copy of the two Originals is extant in the Collection of Publick Acts.

*Articles with the Duke of Orleans.
 Act. Pub.
 X. 776.*

The Terms required of the Duke were much easier than those he had offered himself before the Congress of Arras.
 He was not bound to acknowledge Henry for King of France, or to swear to him, much less to give him up any Towns in Hostage as he had proffered to do formerly. They were contented with taking his Word and Oath, for the Payment of his Ransom, which was set at a Hundred and Twenty Thousand Crowns. It is true indeed, that by these Articles of Agreement he was obliged to get the Dauphin, the Duke of Bretagne, and some others to be bound for the Sum of Sixty Thousand Crowns, which he was not to pay till after he had his Liberty. Moreover, he promised to procure the King Letters Patents from King Charles, whereby that Prince should ratify the Agreement, promise not to obstruct the execution of it, and to account the Duke of Orleans base and infamous, if he should come to break the Articles. In fine, the Duke having protested, that as to the half of his Ransom, which he was to pay before

fore he left England, it was impossible for him to perform his Engagement without going to France. Leave was granted him for a Year.

1440.

The Council consisted then of Persons who blindly followed their Passions without troubling themselves about the Interests of the King and State. Of this we shall quickly see very evident Proofs. The only Thing that gave them any Disturbance, was that the Enlargement of the Duke of Orleans seemed directly contrary to the late King's Will. The Truth is, that Monarch had expressly enjoined by his last Will and Testament, that the Duke of Orleans should be kept Prisoner till the King his Son should be of Age, unless his Liberty should be a Means to procure a Peace; but they found an Expedient to screen themselves from the Murmurs of the People. The King declared by a Publick Act, that in releasing the Duke of Orleans, he intended not to proceed in Contradiction to the King his Father's Will, but that what he did was purely with a View to attain to a speedier Conclusion of a Peace. The better to show that this was the King's Intent, the Duke was bound by fresh Articles to use his utmost Endeavours to procure a Peace between the two Kings; and in case he succeeded, his Ransom should be forgiven, and what he should have paid already should be restored. But if on the contrary his Endeavours proved fruitless, he should return to England and remain a Prisoner as before; but the Money he should have paid towards his Ransom should be returned him. It is evident, that these new Articles were only to throw Dust in the Peoples Eyes, since they were directly contrary to the others; and since they added a Condition which was not in the Duke's Power. In the next Place, this appears still plainer, in that the Peace not having been concluded, the Duke returned not into Eng- land, and was never complained against. But he punctually performed the first Agreement.

He is set at Liberty.

Remarks upon a Mistake of the French Historians. Act. Pub. X. 787- Ibid. p. 791.

All the French Authors have done the Duke of Burgundy the Honour to say, that he lent the Duke of Orleans Money to pay his Ransom. But we find by the Collection of Publick Acts, that all he did in favour of his newly reconciled 1440.

Enemy amounted to no more than this. He consented that his Dutchess should promise in her own Name to send the King her Bond for Thirty Thousand Crowns, which the Dauphin was to pay; or in case of Refusal to become responsible for them. But as the Dauphin made no scruple to give his own Bond, the Dutchess of Burgundy's Promise became of no Effect. It is true, the Duke of Burgundy received the Duke of Orleans in a very splendid Manner at Gravelin, where they confirmed their Reconciliation. I have dwelt the longer upon the Enlargement of the Duke of Orleans, because it serves to discover the Temper of the Court and Council, on which depend all the future Events of this Reign. Let us return now to the more general Affairs.

Conventions between Henry and the Duke of Bretagne.

Ibid.
p 789.

The Duke of Bretagne pretended all along to observe a Neutrality, though the Succours which the Constable his Brother brought from time to time to King Charles, could neither be levied in his Country, nor led from thence without his Leave or Connivance. If the English had been in better Circumstances, they would doubtless have shown their Relentment. But in the present Posture of their Affairs, they thought themselves well off, that the Duke of Bretagne did not openly declare for their Enemies. Mean while, as the English and Britons molested one another at Sea, contrary to the Interests of both Nations, the King and Duke thought fit to conclude a Treaty, whereby they mutually engaged not to suffer any naval Armaments to be made in their Ports, to the Detriment of each others Subjects.

Death of the Earl of Warwick.
p. 788.

Richard de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick and Regent of France, dying in the Beginning of Summer, the Duke of York was sent thither again in that Quality, though he had been recalled before to give Place to the Earl of *Warwick.

If

* He died at Rouen in Normandy, April 30, 1439. (says Dugdale) possessed of a vast Estate, the yearly Value (as appears from the Accounts of his Bailiffs in 12 Hen. 6.) amounting to 8306 Marks, 11 Shillings and 11 Pence Half-penny, at a Time when Barley was but 4 Shillings and Two-pence a Quarter, Oats 2 Shillings and three Half-pence, Cipons Three-pence a piece, and Hens three Half-pence, as appears from the Accounts of his Household Officers.

If the English had been strong enough in France to improve the present Opportunity, never had a fairer offered to repair their past Losses. The Dauphin and all the Princes of the Blood, except the Duke of Burgundy and the Earl of Eu were joined in a League against the King. This League tended to no less than the dethroning of Charles, and setting the Crown on the Head of the Prince his Son. But luckily for him, the Confederates had engaged La Trimouille in their Party, and by so doing they entirely lost the Constable. As he mortally hated that Lord, his Hatred reflected upon the whole Party, and induced him to bring the King a powerful Aid, which enabled him to get the better of the Princes. This Civil War was called La Praguerie, but for what Reason I know not. The League was so ill managed on the Part of the Confederates, that the King at length compelled them to cast themselves upon his Mercy. In the mean Time, the English, who no longer carried on the War with vigour, made some Incursions about Paris. But the Bastard of Orleans, who after having sided first with the Dauphin, was come over to the King, stopped their Progress, which was not very considerable by reason of their Weakness.

1440.
Quarrels in Charles's Court.

After Charles had put an End to this dangerous War, he marched back towards Paris, and in his way became Master of la Charité by bribing the Governour.

In the mean Time the Dutcheis of Burgundy never ceased her Endeavours to get the Conferences about a Peace set on Foot again. At length after having laboured to compass her Ends this whole Year, she prevailed with the two Kings to appoint Plenipotentiaries to meet at St. Omer. The Duke of Orleans was made choice of for one of the Mediators.

This new Congress had no better Success than the former. The Ambassadors were all come to St. Omer. But the Earl of Vendôme, Head of the French Embassy, refused to treat with those of England, on pretence that they were of an inferior Quality. They were however Peers of the Realm, namely, the Bishop of Rocheſter and the Lord Fanhope. In the Reign of Henry V the French did 1441.

A new Congress about a Peace.

1441.

did not stand upon such Punctilio's. They conferred without any Scruple with bare Doctors in Law, provided they were duly impowered. It is true, the Ambassadors nominated for this Congress were not of so high a Degree as the former ones. But as there was no likelihood that the French would be more moderate in their Demands, the Council did not think proper to put the King or the Princes or any of the highest Quality to a needless Expence. Be that as it will, Charles took occasion from thence to revoke the Powers he had given his Ambassadors. Thus the Congress was broke off without being ever opened. The French cast the blame on the English, pretending that the Court of England had pitched upon Persons of no Birth or Note, on purpose that they might not be treated with. The Truth is, both Parties generally aimed only at amusing one another by these Conferences. They both guessed pretty well what their Ambassadors were to demand; and as they were resolved not to grant it, they could expect no great Matters from these Negotiations. They consented to them however, as well to justify themselves to the Publick, as to try to amuse each other by the Prospect of a Peace.

Charles

takes Creil.

Whilst the Ambassadors were repairing to St. Omer, Charles was preparing an Army with Design to make a powerful Effort, and take Advantage of the Indolence of the English. As soon as he was ready, he ordered Admiral de Coitivy to invest Creil upon Oyse, with a Detachment of the Army. The Constable having joined him with the rest of his Troops, the Siege was regularly formed, and the King came thither about the End of April, to take the Town by Capitulation.

He lays

Siege to Pontoise.

This was only to pave the Way to a more considerable Undertaking, namely, the Siege of Pontoise which Charles laid in the Beginning of July, with an Army of twelve Thousand Men. He had with him the Dauphin his Son and all the Generals and Officers of Note in France. This Siege was at first carried on very vigorously; but the Besiegers showed no less Bravery. Talbot, whom the most difficult Undertakings could never daunt, being ordered by the Duke of York to get a Convoy into the Town, attack-

Talbot

throws Succours into the Town.

ed

ed one of the Enemies Quarters, and breaking through, entered the Place with his Convoy. This seasonable Supply inspired the Garrison with fresh Courage, who made so brave a Defence, that the Siege went on but slowly. Though the Besiegers were exceeding watchful, having to do with so experienced a Warrior as Talbot, they could not hinder him from throwing Succours into the Town three several Times. Nevertheless Charles was obstinately resolved to continue the Siege which he had taken in Hand at the Desire of the Parisians who defrayed all the Charges. But at length the Duke of York having approached the Town and sent a Herald to the King to offer him Battle. Charles sent back Word, that he should see what he had to do, and that he intended not to regulate his Time by that of his Enemies. He saw the English Army on the other Side of the River Ouse, which they could not pass but over a Bridge guarded by a Detachment of a Thousand Men. And therefore being under no Apprehension of a sudden Attack, he continued the Siege at leisure. Meanwhile the Duke of York resolving at any rate to relieve the Place, found Means to pass over in the Night with five or six Hundred Men in Boats made of boiled Skins. This Detachment falling unexpectedly upon the Guard of the Bridge, and cutting them in Pieces, opened a way for the Duke, who immediately came over to the other Side with his whole Army. Charles was so astonished at this Action, which he little expected, that he suddenly raised the Siege and retired under the Cannon of Poissi. The Duke of York followed him and offered him Battle to no Purpose. At last, having braved him for some Time, and plundered before his Face the Abbey of Poissi, he retired, not thinking proper to attack him in that Post.

The hasty Retreat of King Charles before an Enemy much weaker than himself, was extremely injurious to his Reputation. All the French loudly murmured at it, but the Parisians more than all the rest. The King's best Friends were dismayed at it, and openly showed the Fears they were under, that so general a Discontent would prove fatal to him. In fine, those nearest his Person having made him sensible

The Duke of York raises the Siege.

Charles suffers in his Reputation by it.

1441.

He returns before Pon-toise, and takes it by Storm.

sensible how much he endangered his Reputation by an Action so unbecoming his Honour, he resolved to retrieve his Credit let the Consequence be what it would. Wherefore when it was least expected, he went and sat down again before Pontoise, and pressed the Place so hard that it was carried by Storm. He signalized himself in the Assault in such a manner as served to wipe out all the ill Impressions which his former Conduct had made to his Disadvantage. He was seen on the Breach, Sword in Hand, fighting with an undaunted Courage, and exposing his Person like a common Soldier. By this vigorous Exploit, he plainly discovered that if he delighted not in War, it was not so much for want of Courage, as from a too great Attachment to his Pleasures. Some Time after the Town of Evreux was taken from the English by the help of a Fisherman, who found Means to let in the French.

The Dutchess of Gloucester accused of Witchcraft and Treason.

Whilst these Things were doing in France, a very strange Incident happened in England. I have frequently observed, that the Duke of Gloucester's Credit sensibly declined, or rather was entirely sunk. We have seen a glaring Proof of this in the Course of the present Reign. This Prince was unblameable in his Conduct with regard to the King. Notwithstanding all the Spies which his Enemies had about him, they could discover nothing that might serve for a Cloak to the least Charge against his Person. But at length by narrowly prying into what passed in his Family, they came to know that his Dutchess had frequent Conferences with [one Sir Roger Bolinbroke] a Priest who was reckoned a Negromancer, and a certain Woman * who was counted a Witch. This was enough whereon to ground an Impeachment of High-Treason against her. She was charged with making together with these two Persons, the Figure of the King in Wax, and that by placing it before a gentle Fire, she intended that the King's Strength should waste insensibly as the Wax dissolved, and that his Life should be at an

* Marjery Gurdemain of Eye near Winchester, who was burnt in Smithfield. Thomas Southwell and Sir John Hume Priests were accused likewise of being concerned with the Dutchess.

an end when the Image was all dissolved. By this Indictment, their Aim was to make appear that the Dutchess's Intent was to destroy the King, to the end the Crown might fall to the Duke her Husband. At the same Time they would have raised in the King and People suspicions against the Duke himself. When the Parties accused were examined, the Priest denied all; but the Dutchess confessed that she had desired the Woman to make her a Phyliter, to fix the Love of her Spouse, which sometimes wandered after other Objects. Though this Confession did not make her guilty of the Crime she was accused of, yet the Duke's Enemies had taken such Measures, that the Priest was condemned to be hanged, and the Woman to be burnt. As for the Dutchess, though she would have been the most guilty, if the Thing had been well proved, they were contented under colour of the Regard they had for the Duke her Husband, with putting her to solemn Penance in St. Paul's Church before all the People, and condemning her to perpetual Imprisonment *. This was a terrible Mortification to the first Prince of the Blood, who had been Protector of the Realm, and all along shown an ardent Zeal for the Interests and Honour of the King. But his Enemies were so powerful that he found himself constrained to be quiet, for fear of giving them a Handle to fall directly upon him.

She is condemned to do Penance, and to be imprisoned for Life.

Charles had scarce taken Breath after the Siege of Pontoise, before he saw himself in a very great Streight. All the Princes of his House were in a fresh League against him, with the Duke of Orleans at their Head. This Prince was highly offended at the cold Reception the King had given him, after a Twenty-five Years Captivity which he had undergone for the Interests of France, and even during which he had done him very signal Services. In all likelihood this League would have given a deadly Blow to the King's Affairs, if pursuant to a lucky Piece of Advice, he had not

New League against King Charles.

* Her Judges were the Earls of Huntington, Stafford, Suffolk, and Northumberland, with some other Lords. She was kept Prisoner in Chester-Castle, under the Custody of Sir Thomas Stanley.

1441.

brought off the Head by considerable Favours. The Defection of the Duke of Orleans having broken all the Confederates Measures, they were fain to have recourse to the King's Clemency. Thus ended the League, and thus end generally all Leagues of Subjects against their Sovereigns, when the Sovereigns are wise enough to find Means to content the Ring-Leaders.

Tartas besieged by the English.

The Town capitulates so surrender if not relieved in six Months.

1442.
Charles advances towards Guienne.

The Rebellion of the Princes was not the only Thing that made King Charles uneasy. His Honour as well as his Interest called upon him to relieve Tartas a Town of Guienne besieged by the English. This Place belonged to the House of Albret, which a good while since did great Service to France by the Diversions they gave the English in Guienne. It greatly concerned the King therefore to succour this House which was in Danger of losing the most considerable Place in their Possession. Otherwise it was to be feared that all the Lords of Guienne which were of his Party, would leave him and turn to the King of England. Mean Time the League of the Princes having hindered him from thinking sooner of relieving Tartas, it was not till November that he began his march to Guienne. The Town still held out, and it was January first before the Garrison capitulated upon a Condition which afforded the King more Time than he had occasion for to prepare for its Relief. The Capitulation ran, that the Town should be committed to the Custody of the Lords, Cognac and Saint Per, to be surrendered to the English, if on the 24th of June next there appeared not a French Army strong enough to give Battle. But if it was relieved on the Day prefixed, it should be restored to the Lord D' Albret.

Charles having all the Leisure necessary to get ready, spent the Winter in Poitou, where he drew a very considerable Army together, consisting of four Hundred Lances, eight Thousand Cross-Bow-Men, and other Archers. All the Lords of the Kingdom having repaired to him, he counted one Hundred and Sixty Banners in his Army. In the mean Time England made no Attempt to defend Guienne, or give the Enemy a Diversion elsewhere. The Council seemed seemed to have lost their Senses, since the Duke of Gloucester had no longer any Credit at the Board. 1442.

With the Forces Charles had drawn together in Poitou, he brought down some Lords of that Country, who carried it there with too high a Hand. From thence he came to Limoges, where he made some stay. Then he went and passed some Time at Montauban. There it was that he lost the brave La Hire or Vignoles one of his best Generals. Death of La Hire. The Relief of Tartas was not the only Motive of his Journey. There was another which touched him more nearly; and that was to become Master of the Earldom of Cominge, to which he laid claim by Virtue of an Intail upon him. As this Affair has some Relation to those of England, it will be necessary to show the Ground of his Pretensions.

Margaret Heiress of Cominge had two Daughters by Charles's her first Husband John III Earl of Armagnac who died Claim to the Earldom of Cominge. in 1391, and the two Daughters died likewise soon after. The Countess was married afterwards to John d' Armagnac Earl of Fezensagnet. But by an Outrage upon the Laws unheard of in France, she divorced her second Husband, who died with Grief in 1403. Then she espoused Matthew de Grailly Brother of John Earl of Foix, and had Issue a Daughter, but of so weak a Constitution that Matthew her Father was afraid the Death of the Mother and Daughter would put him out of the Earldom of Cominge, of which he was in Possession. For this Reason he pressed his Countess, who was much older than himself, to make a Will, and intail it upon him after their Daughter. But the Countess refused to do it. Margaret persisting in her Resolution occasioned such a Quarrel between her and her Husband, that he resolved to dispossess her, with the help of the Earl of Armagnac, who was very ready to join in the Project, on Condition of going shares with him. Whereupon the Earl of Armagnac attacked the Countess, vanquished her, took her Prisoner, and with her Husband's Consent shut her up in a Castle, where she was confined Twenty-two Years. This rigorous Usage served only to exasperate the old Countess the more. At length in 1435 she found Means to make in her Confinement a Will, whereby she no-

1412. nominated her Daughter Jane for her Heir, and after her intailed the Earldom upon King Charles VII. Jane dying some Time after, Charles was informed of this Intail, and as the Countess was still living, he formed a Design to free her from Imprisonment, and get her to confirm her

The Earls of Armagnac and Comminge cited before the Parliament of Toulouse.

Cominge adjudged to the King.

Will. After he had made some stay at Montauban he came to Toulouse, and ordered the Earls of Armagnac and Comminge to be summoned before the Parliament of that City. The two Earls made their Appearance, not daring to stand out against a Prince backed with an Army who had it in his Power to compel them. Besides, seeing the Earl of Armagnac's Ancestors had voluntarily owned the Kings of France for their Sovereign-Lords, there was no room to decline the Jurisdiction of their Parliaments. He was forced therefore to bring the old Countess now fourscore Years of Age, to Toulouse, where the Parliament decreed the Intail made upon the King good and valid. Pursuant to this Decree the King took Possession of the Earldom of Cominge. But for the sake of Gaston Earl of Foix, who had succeeded John his Father in 1437, he was pleased to consent, that Matthew his Uncle should enjoy his Part of the Earldom during Life. The Earl of Armagnac was treated more rigorously. The King not only oured him of the Part he had usurped, but moreover stripped him of the Privilege of the Regale * in his Territories, and forbad him to stile himself, John by the Grace of God, Earl of Armagnac, as he had done hitherto, and as his Ancestors had always done before him.

The Earl of Armagnac is highly offended.

The Earl of Armagnac did not think he had deserved such Usage, after all the Services his House had done the Kings of France. If in order to espouse their Interests, his Ancestors had not cast off the Dominion of the Kings of England, he would not have been liable to appear before the Parliament of Toulouse, nor have lost the Privileges which the Kings of England, Dukes of Guienne, had never disputed with his Predecessors. So that he beheld with extreme

* The Right of which the Kings of France have of disposing of Benefices during the Vacancy of an Episcopal See.

treme Vexation the Zeal of his Ancestors for the Interests of France become the Ground of his Oppression. He burned with a Desire to throw off his Yoke and be revenged.
 But as he was well aware that his Forces alone were not capable to procure him that Satisfaction, he resolved to cast himself into the Arms of the King of England. Shortly He offers after he sent to demand his Protection, with an Offer of his Daugh-one of his Daughters in Marriage. The Proposal being ter to Hen-laid before the Council, it was judged that in the present ry.
 Posture of the King's Affairs in France, the Alliance pro- Act. Pub.
 posed by the Earl of Armagnac could not but be very ad- XI. 6. vantagious. So without Loss of Time, Ambassadors were His Offers dispatched to the Earl of Armagnac, to settle the Marriage- accepted.
 Articles, and to betroth one of his Daughters in the King's Name.

Mean while, Charles having appeared before Tartas on Charles rethe 24th of June, and no Enemy offering to give him Bat- lieves Tartle, the Place was restored to the Lord d' Albret, according tas, and to the Capitulation. They were not ignorant in England takes seveof the Preparations of the French, and yet they had taken ral Places no Measures for the Defence of Guienne, which was going in Guienne.
 to be invaded. Charles taking Advantage of their Carelessness, became Master of St. Sever. Then he went and laid Siege to Acs, one of the strongest Places in those Parts, which held out seven Weeks. La Reole was carried by Storm; and Marmande fell likewise into the Hands of the French. During the Winter following, which was exceeding sharp, Acs and St. Sever opened their Gates to the Eng- lish: but the Earl of Foix retook St. Sever. Charles passed the whole Winter at Toulouse.

Whilst these things were transacting at one End of the Talbot Kingdom, the English were thinking of making a Diver- made Earl sion at the other. They should have thought of it sooner, of Shrews-to the end they might have diverted Charles from marching bury, and into Guienne. By that Means they would have infallibly the Bastard preserved the Places they had just lost. Be that as it will, of Orleans Orders being given to raise five Thousand Men in England, Earl of the Command of them was conferred on Talbot, whom the Dunois.
 King had lately created Earl of Shrewsbury. Talbot landing in 1448.

*Exploits of
the Earl of Shrewsbury in Normandy.*

He blockades Dieppes.

and goes to England for a Reinforcement.

The Duke of Gloucester accuses the Cardinal of Winchester.

in Normandy, soon made the Bastard of Orleans quit the Field, who had likewise a new Title as well as he, being made Earl of Dunois. He presently laid Siege to the Castle of Conches, and to make a Diversion, the French General invested Galardon. Talbot having carried the Castle in a few Days, the Earl of Dunois did not think fit to stay his coming, who was marching directly to give him Battle. Then the Earl of Shrewsbury advanced towards Dieppe, a Place of great Importance, which the French still held in Normandy. He made such speed, that Estouteville, who was marching with the utmost Expedition, in order to throw in a Supply of Troops, could not arrive soon enough. Upon his coming before the Place, he formed the Siege, though with an Army little proportionable to such an Undertaking, and especially in the Month of November. The Truth is, he did not expect to be Master of it during the Winter, and without more Forces. But his design was to take the Fort of Charles Mesnil, situated on Mount Polet, which hindered him from approaching the Town. After that he was in hopes to block it up so closely, that it should be forced to surrender. Having thus taking his Measures, he attacked the Fort Sword in Hand and carried it. And then ordered it to be made longer and stronger; and having mounted his Batteries, left the Management of the Siege or rather Blockade to his Bastard Son, and returned to England in order to sollicite Reinforcements.

As Matters then stood at Court, it was no proper Time for the Earl of Shrewsbury to succeed in obtaining the Succours he demanded, at least not so soon as was necessary. The Duke of Gloucester perceiving the King's Affairs grew daily worse and worse, brought at this very time before the Council an Impeachment of High-Treason against the Cardinal of Winchester. Apparently his Enmity to that Prelate made him look upon him as the Occasion of all the Misfortunes which had befallen the English. It may be, he had no other Design but to clear himself to the Publick by accusing his Enemy. And indeed, so well acquainted as he was without doubt with the Temper of the Council, he could not flatter himself with the least Prospect of succeeding.

ceeding in an Affair of that Nature. However that be, the Impeachment consisted of Fourteen Articles, the Substance whereof is as follows :

I. That the Bishop of Winchester had accepted the Dignity of Cardinal, contrary to the late King's Orders and the Rights of the Metropolitan See of Canterbury. Heads of Impeachments.

II. That by the Statute against Provisors, having forfeited the Bishoprick of Winchester, he had procured the Pope's Bull to secure it, and by so doing had acted contrary to the Laws of the Realm, and particularly to the Statute of Premunire made for that Purpose.

III. That jointly with John Kemp Archbishop of York, he had unjustly seized upon the Government of the King's Person without being authorized thereto.

IV. That he had defrauded the King of his Jewels.

This Article was grounded upon the Cardinal's lending the King Money upon Pawn.

V. That being Chancellor of the Kingdom, he had sealed an Order for the Enlargement of the King of Scotland, and another to forgive that Prince part of his Ransom, provided he would marry his Niece.

VI. That he had deprived the King of his Revenues, by applying to his own use the Customs on Wool at the Port of Southampton.

Apparently the Cardinal stopped by that Means the Money he had lent the King.

VII. That he had the Confidence to summon People before him, contrary to the Prerogatives of the Crown, and the Authority Royal.

He did this, in all appearance as Legate. But he could not do so according to Law, without the King's Licence.

VIII. That he had procured from Rome an Exemption for his Diecese from all the King's Taxes, and thereby had given a very pernicious Precedent to the rest of the Bishops.

IX. That he had been instrumental in reconciling the Duke of Burgundy with King Charles and the Duke of Orleans, to the great Prejudice of England.

X. That

1443.

X. That being the King's Ambassador and Plenipotentiary to treat about Peace, he had sent the Archbishop of York to the King, to persuade him to quit the Title of King of France, to the Dishonour of the King and his illustrious Ancestors.

XI. That the Enlargement of the Duke of Orleans had been brought about by his and the Duke of York's Intrigues contrary to the express Order of the late King.

XII. That being High Chancellor, he had himself purchased Crown Lands instead of hindering such kind of Alienations according to the Duty of his Office.

XIII. That by giving Commissions to such Officers in the Army only as were his Creatures, he had been the Cause of all the Losses sustained in France.

XIV. That he had sold Captains Commissions, and by that Means brought into the King's Service such as were incapable of doing their Duty.

The Cardinal is acquitted.

A& Pub.
XI. 20.

These Accusations were read in Council. But the Board had for a good while consisted of none but the Cardinal's Creatures and the Duke of Gloucester's Enemies. And therefore, under colour of being unwilling to meddle with the Prerogative Royal, the A& of Indemnity which the King had granted the Cardinal in 1437 was trumped up. The Duke of Gloucester, plainly perceiving there was no possibility of getting his Enemy condemned, dropped the Impeachment, and the King gave the Cardinal a fresh Pardon.

The Duke of Gloucester loses Ground daily.

They prejudice the King against him.

Certainly the Duke of Gloucester saw himself in an ugly Situation. Besides the Vexation he was under to behold those that sat at the Helm steering a Course contrary to that which the glorious Henry V. his Brother had chalked out, he perceived they made it their Business to mortify him upon all Occasions. The King his Nephew, who was so much beholden to him, suffered himself to be misled by the Artifices of his Enemies, not having Penetration enough to discern those who had only their own Interest in view. They made him consider his Uncle as a secret Enemy, that would rejoice at his Destruction, seeing he was

was next Heir. What is more, they inspired him with strong Suspicions against him, by representing him as a Counsellor whose Interest it was to ingage him in wrong Courses, in order to draw upon him the Contempt and Hatred of his Subjects, and by that Means pave his own Way to the Crown. It is no Wonder that a young Prince of so narrow a Genius as Henry, should be blinded by such Insinuations. He had no Body near his Person that might help to undeceive him. For some Time since he saw none but his Uncle's Enemies. The Cardinal was ever watchful not to suffer any Person at Court, or at the Board, but what was devoted to him; and this he made his chief Business. He it was that had introduced to Court the Earl of Saiffolk, of whom the King was so exceeding fond, that he saw nothing but with his Eyes, and did nothing but by his Advice. As the new Favourite was wholly indebted to the Cardinal for his good Fortune, he missed no Opportunity to insinuate to his Master that of all his Subjects the Cardinal was the Man he could most safely confide in. By this Means, he daily sunk the Duke of Gloucester's Credit, whose Counsels were always directly contrary to those of his Enemy. John Kemp Archbishop of York and Cardinal (a), was also a Counsellor wholly devoted to the Cardinal of Winchester, and an Instrument of his to confirm the King in his Suspicions against the Duke of Gloucester. Thus these three Ministers strictly united together, ordered it so, that the King daily gave his Uncle some fresh Mortification. On the other Hand, the haughty and impatient Temper of the Duke of Gloucester not suffering him to brook Indignities without complaining and threatening the Authors, he hastened his own Ruin by the false Steps his Impatience made him run into.

In September this Year the Dutcheſs of York was brought to Bed of a Prince, whom we shall see hereafter mount the Throne by the Name of Edward IV.

Birth of Edward Son of the Duke of York.

(a) Promoted to the Cardinalship by Eugenius IV in 1431.

1442.

John V Duke of Bretagne dying the 28th of August, Francis his eldest Son had succeeded him in the Sovereignty of that Dutchy.

1443.

Truce between England and Burgundy.
Monsirelet.

The Year 1443 began with a private Negotiation between the King and Duke of Burgundy. The Duke finding that Matters were in such a Way that the Quarrel between the two Kings was not likely to be decided, either by War or Peace, thought it his wisest Course to get out of the Scrape by making a separate Truce with England. He was not pleased with King Charles upon several Accounts too tedious to be inserted here. On the contrary, he had reason to fear that Charles was Friends with him purely out of Policy, and that in Case his Affairs should once come to be firmly restored, he might resume his old Animosity against him. For this Reason chiefly he judged it would be against his Interest to assist him any longer to finish a War, the prosperous Issue whereof might render him too powerful. These Considerations induced him to give his Dutches full Power to conclude with the King of England a general Truce for all their respective Dominions. That which was made before, concerned only the Trade between England and the Low-Countries. But this which was signed the 23d of April included Burgundy and all the Dukes Territories in general. It was to last till one of the Parties should put an End to it, in which Case the other was to have notice of it three Months before-hand.

Charles
sends the Dauphin to relieve Dieppe.

The Blockade of Dieppe was continued all this while, in expectation of the Supplies which were to come from England in order to carry on the Siege more vigorously. Charles perceiving the Place would be in great Danger if not relieved before the Arrival of the English Troops, resolved at last to send thither the Dauphin his Son, who pressed him to commit to him the Conduct of this Affair. It was not however without Reluctance that he granted him this Favour. He was not only afraid to trust out of his Sight this young Prince who had several Times already given Proofs of a turbulent Spirit, but moreover did not Care to afford him Opportunities of acquiring Glory. These Considerations however gave Place to the necessity of relieving

Dieppe

Dieppe, which was reduced to Extremities by an eight Months Blockade. The Dauphin set out from Guienne with a Body of four Thousand Horse, and marched towards Normandy. When he came within Sight of Dieppe, he easily saw that the Fort of Charles Masnil where the English had fortified themselves, was impregnable on the Side next the Field. And therefore without hesitating, he chose to enter the Town and executed his Design, in spite of all the English could do to hinder him. Hardly was he in, when without giving them Time to breathe, he sallied out with all his Troops, and stormed the Fort on the Side next the Town. He was beat back three Times, but the fourth he carried it Sword in Hand. The English finding they were unable to continue the Blockade after the loss of their Fort, raised it and retired in good Order. John Duke of Somerset, who had lately succeeded Henry his Brother, arrived five Days after with a Reinforcement of five Thousand Men. Had he came sooner the Dauphin would not perhaps have got off with so much Honour. As the Duke found the Blockade raised, he could do nothing more than ravage Part of the Enemies Country, after having retaken some Castles in Normandy.

Lewis raises the Blockade of Dieppe.

The Duke of Somerset comes too late.

The Earl of Armagnac takes Possession again of Cominge.

The Dauphin
seizes him of his Territories.

Since the Departure of the Dauphin, Charles had at length quitted Guienne, and was come to Tours, where he diverted himself after the Hardships of the War. But his Pleasures were somewhat disturbed by the News he received that the Earl of Armagnac had taken up Arms and seized that Part of the Earldom of Cominge which he had been lately dispossessed of. The voluptuous Life Charles lead at Tours, was to him so full of Charms, that he could not resolve to interrupt his Pleasures so soon. He waited till the Dauphin was returned, and as he had behaved so well in the Affair of Dieppe, he dispatched him immediately upon his Arrival, to go and chastise the Earl of Armagnac. Upon the Dauphin's Approach; the Earl saw himself deserted by all his Friends, and the English stirred not in his Defence, though the King was betrothed to his Daughter: So that the Dauphin became Master without much difficulty of Revergne, and of all in general that belonged to the Earl who 1443. had nothing left but the little Town of Lisle en Jourdain about Twenty Miles from Toulouse. The Dauphin kept it besieged a good while in vain. At length, despairing of putting an honourable End to the Siege, he managed it so, that he got the Earl to meet him at a Conference, upon his giving him a Safe-Conduct, and when he had him in his Power, sent him to the King his Father, who made no scruple to detain him. Two Years after he restored him his Territories at the Instances of the Kings of Castile and Navarre, who interceded in his behalf.

Makes him Prisoner by Treachery.

The Earl of Armagnac's Misfortune made the King and Council of England grow cold with respect to the Match, of which there was no further Talk. They scrupled not to put that Affront upon an unfortunate Prince, who had it not in his Power to be revenged.

1444.
The two Kings are equally desirous of a Peace.

Since the Duke of Burgundy had made a separate Truce with Henry, the French were not so eager for continuing the War. The Truth is, they had no less need of rest than the English. France was utterly ruined by this fatal War, which had lasted thirty Years without Interruption, and by the intestine Troubles which the Quarrel between the Houses of Orleans and Burgundy had raised several Years before the Breach of the Truce. The Princes and great Men were disheartened at the Hardships and Losses they sustained so long since. The Country and Towns were become desolate. France, though generally well peopled, could no longer find Soldiers. Besides, the Duke of Orleans who had passed his Word to use his utmost Endeavour to procure a Peace, being willing to keep his Promise, never ceased to sollicite King Charles upon that Score. The Duke of Burgundy pressed him likewise on his Part, and the whole Kingdom in general ardently wished to see at length an End put to so many Calamities. In England they were no less desirous of Peace. All the Money that was levied there, was swallowed up in France as it were in a bottomless Gulf, from whence it never returned. In a Word, the King was no Warrior, and his Council consisted for the most Part of Ecclesiasticks, whom the Cardinal of Winchester had brought in to strengthen his Party.

The 1444.

The Council was very sensible that the continuance of the War would by no Means gain them the Affections of the People. As the War had long since been disadvantageous to England, it was natural to cast the Blame upon those that sat at the Helm, rather than upon the King who only approved of what was suggested by his Ministers. The Duke of Gloucester alone was of Opinion, that they ought to do their utmost in order to take Advantage of King Charles's Weakness, and reap the Benefit of the Truce lately made with the Duke of Burgundy. But the Duke was no longer in vogue, neither were his Counsels regarded.

These Considerations, which were very weighty on both Sides, prevailed at length with the two Kings to hearken to the Instances of the Duke of Burgundy, who urged him to consent to a Truce, that they might the more calmly set about making a Peace. It was agreed that the Negotiation should be at Tours, where King Charles resided, though it should seem by that as if the English were to come and sue for it. At any other Time the bare proposing to treat at Tours would have been enough to spoil all. But Henry's Council stood not so much upon Punctilio's. They were for having a Truce at any rate, and nothing appeared dishonourable to attain that End. We shall even see presently that almost every Thing was adjusted in private, before the Ambassadors set out for Tours. This Truce, which seemed to be grounded upon the Publick Good, was properly designed purely for the Support of the Ministry, who had nothing less in view than the Benefit of the Kingdom. Henry perceived nothing of the Matter. He suffered himself to be guided according to Custom, by his Counsellors, who made him believe that they had his Interests at Heart, when in reality they were working only for themselves.

William de la Pole Earl of Suffolk was appointed Head of the Embassy which was to go to France. The Earl had more than one Reason to desire this Office, as will be seen presently. Mean while, as he was not ignorant how ticklish a Step he was going to make, and how liable to be strictly inquired into, he presented to the King a Petition, which in all appearance had been concerted with the principal

It is agreed to treat about a Truce at Tours.

The Earl of Suffolk head of the Embassy.

He acts cautiously in the Matter.

1444.
February.
A&C. Pub.
XI. 53.

pal Members of the Council. He appeared in his Petition exceeding scrupulous with regard to the Instructions he had received, pretending they were vastly beyond his Capacity, though in all likelihood he was himself the Author of them. Then he modestly begged to be eased of the Burden of the Negotiation, or at least, if the King did not think proper to grant him that Favour, he would be pleased to secure him against all After-reckonings. Whereupon the King by the Advice of his Council, caused an authentick Order to be drawn up, empowering him to execute fully every Particular contained in his Instructions. As in all probability, this Order was not to be shown but in Case of Necessity, and after the Execution, the King said in it, that the Instructions concerned not only the general Good of the Kingdom, but also his own Person and Marriage. A clear Evidence that the Marriage we shall speak of presently, was already resolved upon.

A Truce is concluded at Tours.
A&C. Pub.
XI. 54.

The Ambassadors of England being come to Tours, forthwith began to treat with King Charles's Commissioners about a Peace. But after some Proposals on both Sides, which came to nothing, they agreed to a Truce, which was signed the 28th of May. It was to commence the 7th of July this Year, and end the first of April 1446.

ibid.
p. 58.

At the same Time, the Truce between England and Scotland was prolonged for seven Years, to begin the 1st of May 1447, which was the Day the former Truce was to expire.

Suffolk proposes a Marriage between the King and Margaret of Anjou.

The Business of the Truce with France being over, the Earl of Suffolk proposed, or got to be proposed, a Match between the King his Master and Margaret of Anjou's Daughter of René of Anjou who bore the Title of King of Sicily, since the Death of Lewis III his elder Brother. The English tax the Earl of Suffolk with making this Proposal of his own Head, without any Authority; but we have seen the contrary above. Not but that in all appearance he was the first Contriver of it; but he had taken the Precaution to get it approved of by the King. He was willing to keep the Post he was in, and nothing was more proper to that End than the Marriage he had in View. He was sensible

His Motives for it.

fible that Henry was incapable of holding the Reins of the Government himself, and consequently it could not be otherwise but that his Ministers would be liable to Envy, and bear the blame of every Thing that should not be relished by the People. In this Belief he fancied the best way to support himself was to give the King a Wife, and the Kingdom a Governess at the same Time. To that End, it was necessary that the Princess which should mount the Throne, should be of great Parts, able to supply the Defects of the King her Spouse, and of a steady Resolution, which might afford a Prospect that she would protect the Ministry. It was necessary moreover, that she should be of such a Rank as not to be a Disparagement to the King, but withal should have no Ground naturally to aspire to such a Match, to the end that being entirely beholden to those that helped her to it, she might be always ready to support them. The Earl of Suffolk's Aim was likewise to be strictly united with the Queen, in order to complete the Ruin of the Duke of Gloucester, who was a continual Obstacle to the Designs of the Ministry. All these Requisites were found in Margaret of Anjou, Daughter of René King of Sicily, and Niece of the Queen of France. She was a Princess of a lively, daring Spirit, of great Penetration, uncommon Resolution, and not to be frightened by Opposition or Difficulties. On the other Hand, the Match which the Earl of Suffolk proposed was so advantageous, that she durst not have had any Thoughts of it, if several Circumstances had not concurred in her Favour. I do not speak of her Birth, which certainly was illustrious enough to give her a Pretension to this Honour. But she was so destitute of the Goods of Fortune, that her Parents could not give her any Dowry. To supply this Defect, the English Ministers extolled to the Skies her noble Qualities, which they said were more to be valued than all the Money in the World. Most especially they hinted to the People, that this Princess being Niece to the Queen of France; and a great Favourite of King Charles's, would be very Instrumental in procuring a Peace. This was too plainly showing how much

He engages to deliver up Maine to the King of Sicily.

France,

1444. France, who had perfect Intelligence of all that passed in England, made their Advantage of it, by engaging the Earl of Suffolk to promise on the King's Name to deliver up Main, and the whole Province of Maine to the King of Sicily, on Condition that he should make a Pretent of them to Charles of Anjou his Brother. Thus instead of receiving a Marriage-Portion with Margaret, Henry purchased a Wife with the Restitution of one of the strongest Places in France, or rather with the whole Province of Maine.

He returns to England.

The Duke of Gloucester opposes the Match.

The Terms being thus settled, the Earl of Suffolk returned to England, in order to lay them before the King and get his Approbation. This was no difficult Matter, since the principal Counsellors were in the Secret, and had already given their Consent. The Duke of Gloucester, who had never heard of this Match before, strongly opposed it for two Reasons which seemed unanswerable. The First was, That the King being already engaged to the Daughter of the Earl of Armagnac, it would be very dishonourable to break his plighted Faith, without alledging the least Excuse. The Second was of no less Force, namely, that Maine being as it were the Bulwark of Normandy, it could not be given up without putting Normandy in manifest Danger, as soon as the Truce should expire. But there was no regard had to these Reasons. So that by the Advice of the Council, the King impowered the Earl of Suffolk to go and espouse the Princess Margaret, in his Name.

Divers new Creations.

For Joy the Marriage was concluded, the King created the Earl his Ambassador, Marquis of Suffolk, and upon John Holland Earl of Huntington, he conferred the Title of Duke of Exeter. At the same Time he created Humphrey Earl of Stafford Duke of Buckingham, and Henry de Beauchamp Son of the late Earl of Warwick Duke of Warwick *.

The

* In Consideration of his Father's great Descent, the King granted him Place in Parliament and all other Meetings, next the Duke of Norfolk, and before Humphrey de Stafford Duke of Buckingham, the which occasioning great Animositics between them, by a special Act made in Parliament, it was established, that they should have Precedency by Turns yearly, the Duke of Warwick to begin the first Year. But his Death shortly after put an End to this Matter. Dugdale.

The King's Marriage was solemnized by Proxy at Tours, in the Presence of King Charles and his whole Court, in a splendid manner, little suitable to the present Circumstances of the two Kings, and the Indigence of the new Queen.

1444.
The King's Marriage solemnized at Tours.

Though the Nuptials were celebrated in November, the Queen came not to England till the May following, and on the 30th of the same Month she was solemnly crowned. She was no sooner near the King, but perceiving his Weakness, she got an absolute Ascendent over him. By that Means the Marquis of Suffolk, the Cardinal of Winchester, and the Archbishop of York bore the same Sway they had done before the King's Marriage. They stood in need of the Queen, and she on her Part could not do without them, since she had yet no other Creatures but those they had helped her to. For this Reason a very strict Union was formed between the Queen and the Ministers which could not but end in the Ruin of the Duke of Gloucester, whom they all looked upon as their common Enemy.

November.
1445.
The Queen's Arrival. She is crowned.

A League against the Duke of Gloucester.

The Truce having been made purely with Design to bring about a Peace, this whole Year was spent in several Negotiations about the Time and Place of a new Congress. It was thought likewise that an Interview of the two Kings might forward the Conclusion of a Peace. Wherefore the Ministers of both Courts agreed, that the two Monarchs should meet somewhere in France, and to that Purpose Henry should repair to Calais, that he might be near the Place which should be pitched upon for the Interview. But several Difficulties arising about the choice of the Place, the Truce was prolonged till November the 1st 1446.

The Truce is prolonged at an Interview of the two Kings.

Henry Chicheley who held the See of Canterbury thirty Years, died this Year, and was succeeded by John Stafford Bishop of Bath and Wells.

John Stafford Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Duke of York having nothing more to do in France, came to England, where the Court gave him a very kind Reception, and thanked him for the Services he had done the State. The King willing to show his Gratitude, granted him a Patent for the Regency of France during five Years longer. We shall see hereafter that his Enemies would not suffer him to enjoy that Dignity so long.

1446.
The Duke of York is made Regent of France for five Years longer.

1446.
A Subsidy granted for the War.

Truce is prolonged.
Act. Pub.
XI. 108.

The Parliament gives the Marquis of Suffolk
Thanks.

Project against the
Duke of Gloucester.

The Parliament which met in the Beginning of the Year 1446, granted the King a considerable Subsidy for carrying on the War in France with Vigour, as soon as the Truce should be expired. But this pretended Design of continuing the War, was only a Lure to draw Money from the Parliament. Instead of making Preparations for War, Negotiations for the Interview of the two Kings, and the holding a Congress were continued with Eagerness. Mean while, the Truce was further prolonged to April the 1st, 1447. This shows that the Council intended not to carry on the War, though the Parliament was called on that Pretence. We shall see presently that the Truce was again prolonged, and that it was not broke but by an unexpected Accident, contrary to the Intention of those that sat at the Helm in England.

The Parliament might easily have seen through the Devices made use of to get Money from them, if they had not voluntarily shut their own Eyes. This was one of those Parliaments that are managed by the Intrigues of the Court, as it is but too often the Case. This plainly appeared by the Resolution they took to return the Marquis of Suffolk publick Thanks for the great Service he had done the Kingdom, in negotiating the King's Marriage. Mean time, no body as yet had been able to see any Advantage accrue to the King or State, from an Alliance with the Family of the most mortal Enemy to both. Neither did the Parliament stop there. They addressed the King, praying him to reward the Marquis; and even granted a Subsidy on purpose to make him amends for the Expence he had been at in his Embassy.

The Queen, the Cardinal of Winchester, the Marquis of Suffolk, and the rest of that Party finding themselves firmly established, and having nothing to fear from a Parliament so much at their Devotion, began to contrive Means to ruin the Duke of Gloucester, who was ever formidable to them. The People, for the most Part, were for him. Besides, as hitherto he was the Heir-apparent of the Crown, they had reason to fear, that in case he should one Day mount the Throne, he would call them to account.

The

1446.

The first Step they made was to remove him from the Council-Board. To give some colour to this Act of Injustice, they suborned Persons to accuse him of divers Crimes, the Principal whereof was, that being Protector of the Realm, he had put several People to Death by his own Authority, and aggravated the Condemnation of others. Upon these Accusations, about which a great Noise was made, he was summoned before the Council. But he cleared himself with such Evidence from all that was laid to his Charge, that the Council, though entirely made up of his Enemies, thought not proper to push the Business any farther. It is not in England as in other Countries, where the Lives of the Subjects depend in some measure on the Will of the Sovereign, who appoints such Commissioners as he pleases, to prosecute those he has a mind to destroy. To take away the Duke of Gloucester's Life in a legal Manner, there was a Necessity of having him tried by his Peers. But his Enemies were well aware, that how great soever their Credit might be, the Body of the Nobility was not so corrupted, as that they could have any Prospect of getting the first Prince of the Blood condemned upon forged Crimes. Mean while, this Precedure raised such an Agitation among the Londoners, that nothing was heard throughout the City, but Praises of the Duke of Gloucester, and Curses against those that governed in the King's Name. These Clamours, which were plain Indications of the Peoples Affection for the Duke, convinced his Enemies that there was no Medium between his and their Ruin. And therefore, without further Consideration, they re-

His Ruin determined.

It was not practicable, as has been observed, to put this Prince to Death by the usual Course of Justice; and it would have been too hazardous to have him openly assassinated. His Enemies were bent upon his Destruction, but 1247.

The Parliament is summoned to St. Edmundsbury.

1447: they had a mind to conceal the Hand that should give him the deadly Blow. To execute their Design with all the Secrecy possible, they devised a Means which the Queen countenanced, if she was not herself the Contriver. This was to impeach him of some Crime, that they might have a Handle to put him in Prison, where they should be able to compass their Ends privately, and without Impediment. To that Purpose it was given out, that a very important Affair required the speedy Meeting of a Parliament. Accordingly one was called for the Month of February next. In the Interim, the Queen and Ministry affected to load the Duke of Gloucester with Honours and Carelles, not to inspire him with Confidence but with Suspicions. They would not have been sorry at his absentsing himself, or taking some other Step that might have given them an Advantage against him. With this view it was, that by secret Emiffaries they endeavoured to fright him, warning him to take care of himself, and hinting that a Design was on Foot to impeach him before the Parliament of sundry Crimes, and several Misdemeanors; and that every Thing was prepared to get him condemned: That they had purposely made choice of St. Edmundsbury to hold the Parliament there, as a Place more proper for their Designs than London, where the People were too much his Friends. All this was hinted to him, purely to induce him to withdraw, and by that Means give himself some Appearance of Truth to the Calumnies they intended to bring on him with. But as he knew his own Innocence, he would not, by absentsing himself, give any room to the World to believe him guilty. However, let him have done what he would, it was not in his Power to escape still into his French Estates.

The Duke is confined.

The first Day of the Session of Parliament the Duke was apprehended and put into close Confinement, without the Liberty to keep any of his Friends. They gave a plausible Colour to his Confinement, saying that he had given out armed Force, and desired to be taken to the Tower, where the Charges found no contrary, there was presently a Commotion in the City on his Score; but it was soon appeased. As the People thought him innocent, every one imagined that he would come off as well now as he did before. But he was allowed neither Time nor Opportunity to make his Defence. On the Morrow he was found dead in his Bed, without any Signs of Violence on his Body. Nevertheless, People were convinced that he was murdered. Some said, he was smothered between two Feather-beds; and others that he underwent the same Fate with Edward II. To remove these Suspicions, his Body was exposed to the View of the Two Houses of Parliament, and of all others that had a mind to see it. But a Man must have been very bold publicly to charge with the Murder those that were considered as the Authors. They were no less than the Managers of the Affairs of the Kingdom, who in sacrificing the first Prince of the Blood to their Malice and Vengeance, plainly enough showed what Enemies of an inferior Rank were to expect.

1447.

He is found dead in his Bed.

His Body exposed to view.

Mean while, to make good in some Measure the Impeachment against the Deceased, several of his Domesticks were apprehended and accused of conspiring to kill the King. Whereupon they were all sentenced to die, by Judges ap-

His Domesticks were condemned for High-Treason.

pointed by virtue of the King's Commission, of whom the Marquis of Suffolk was chief. But notwithstanding the Crime for which they were condemned was the most heinous, the King pardoned them all without Exception.

This of Gloucester was not so fortunate. He was found guilty of many Crimes, and was condemned to die. He was afterwards pardoned, and was afterwards found guilty of many Crimes, and was condemned to die. He was afterwards pardoned, and was afterwards found guilty of many Crimes, and was condemned to die.

He was afterwards pardoned, and was afterwards found guilty of many Crimes, and was condemned to die. He was afterwards pardoned, and was afterwards found guilty of many Crimes, and was condemned to die.

1447.

the Crime for which his Domesticks had been condemned, though they had never been brought Face to Face with him. But as these Domesticks were not of the Number of those whom he trusted the most, nor even some of the principal, nobody could believe that he would have been so unwise as to make them his Instruments, or communicate to them a Design of that Nature, if he had in reality intended any such thing.

Hatred of the People against the Queen and Ministry.

The Outrages exercised upon a Prince of that Character, so universally beloved and esteemed by the People, drew upon the Queen and the Ministers almost as universal a Hatred which Time could never efface. The Queen especially was publicly charged with the Murder, and the Respect which was due to her was not capable of curbing the Tongues of the People. This however is the very Queen whom the French load with excessive Commendations, apparently because she was of the Royal Family of France. It is true, they very slightly pass over the Death of the Duke of Gloucester, and there is not one that undertakes to justify her. As to the King, it is probable enough that he was not consulted in this infamous Action. But whether he never so much as suspected the Authors of the Murder, or whether he had not the Courage to call them to an Account, he can in no wise be excused but on the Score of his natural Weakness. I cannot leave this Subject, without remarking how short-sighted human Policy is. The Queen and the rest of the Duke of Gloucester's Enemies, thought his Death had placed them out of the Reach of all Opposition. But by the just Judgment of God, the Duke's Death was the very Cause of the Ruin of the King, Queen, and all that had been concerned in it. Hence it was that the Duke of York saw himself at Liberty to assert his Claim to the Crown; a Claim, which occasioned the spilling of Torrents of English Blood, and which he would doubtless never have thought of, had he had such a Competitor against him as the Duke of Gloucester *.

While

* His Body was carried to St. Albans, where a noble Monument afterwards erected to his Memory, still remains in the Conventual Church.

Whilst this Tragedy was acting in England, the Negotiations about a Peace were carrying on in France. But as great Difficulties arose against the projected Interview of the two Kings, the Truce was further prolonged to January the 1st, 1448. 1447.
The Truce
prolonged.
A&C. Pub.
XI. 151.

Mean time, the Dutcheſs of Burgundy, by virtue of the Power ſhe had received from the Duke her Husband, had lengthned the Truce with England till 1459, on Condition that if either of the two Parties had a mind to break it, the other ſhould have a Twelve Months notice. After which, a new Treaty was made May the 4th, whereby the two Princes agreed, that the Truce ſhould not be broken within the firſt four Years. The Truce between Burgundy and England prolonged.
P. 140.
P. 171.

The Cardinal of Wincheſter, one of the principal Contrivers of the Death of the Duke of Glouceſter, enjoyed but one Month the Satisfaction of ſeeing his Enemy fallen. He was a Prelate much better cut out for the World than the Church. Accordingly, he remained attached to the former to his laſt Gasp. It is ſaid that he died in a kind of Rage and Deſpair, that his Riches were not capable of exempting him from the common Fate of all Mankind, and to ſee himſelf by that Means upon a Foot with the moſt miſerable. The Death of the Cardinal of Wincheſ-ter.

Mean

Church. He was called the good Duke of Glouceſter, having had his Education in Baliol-College; he became a great Proficient in Learning, and was a great Favourer of learned Men. He laid the firſt Foundation of the famous Library at Oxford, ſince known by the Name of Bodleian, from Sir Thomas Bodley, by whom it was wonderfully increaſed. Sir Thomas Moor gives an Inſtance of this Duke's Sagacity. The King coming one time in Progreſs to St. Albans, a Beggar born blind, as he ſaid, recovered his Sight at the Shrine of St. Albans. The Miracle being noiſed about, the Duke being there with the King, deſired to ſee him; the Beggar being brought, he asked him whether he was born blind? he answered, Yes truly. And can you now ſee, ſays the Duke? Yes, I thank God and St. Alban replies the Beggar. Tell me then, ſays the Duke, what Colour is my Gown? the Beggar readily told him the Colour. And what Colour, ſays the Duke, is ſuch a one's Gown? The Beggar likewiſe told him; and ſo of ſeveral others. You counterfeit Knave, ſays the Duke, how came you that were born blind, and could not ſee till now, ſo ſuddenly to know the Difference of Colours? And thereupon, inſtead of an Alms ordered him to be ſet in the Stocks.

1447.
The People murmur against Suffolk.

He makes his Defence before the King, who gives him an authentick Discharge.

Act. Pub.
XI. 172.

Mean while, the People perceiving that the Time appointed to work out a Peace was spent in vain, loudly murmured against the Marquils of Suffolk. They made no scruple to say openly, that he had betrayed the King and the State; that the Treaty he had made with the French tended only to a Truce destructive of England, as it afforded the Enemy time to fortify himself; that he had engaged to yield up Maine to the French, in order to marry the King with a Princess, who had just given sensible Proofs of the Calamities they were to expect under her Government. These Murmurs were so publick, that the Marquils could not help taking notice of them. In order therefore to endeavour to silence them, he requested the King that he would be pleased to hear his Defence, that he might satisfy him of his Innocence. Whereupon the King set him a Day to come and clear himself, and heard him in his own Apartment, in the Presence of several Lords, none of whom were come there to refute him. He gave an Account of all he had done in France, wherein he was at no great Loss to justify himself, since before his setting out upon his Embassy, he had taken care to be provided with the King's Orders. Having finished his Discourse, the King declared he was satisfied, and gave him Letters Patents under the Great Seal, whereby he acquitted him from all Imputation of Misdemeanor, and enjoined all Persons under Pain of his Displeasure, not to accuse or speak ill of him. But this was not capable of putting a Stop to the Murmurs of the People. No body questioned but the King would be satisfied: but that was not thought a Reason sufficient to satisfy the Nation. In spite of the Marquils's pretended Defence, he was looked on with Horror, as he was believed to have the greatest Hand in the Murder of the Duke of Gloucester. Besides, the King's Marriage brought about by his Means, was considered as one of the saddest Calamities which could possibly befall England. This was the general Opinion of Town and Country. But the Court, where the Queen would allow none but her Creatures, was of another Temper. The Ministers had likewise for Adherents all over the Kingdom, such

such as found their Account in siding with the Court, that is those that held any Post or Office under the Ministry. All such made use of their Authority, and took Pains to stifle the Complaints and Murmurings of the People, who could not bear to see the Administration of the publick Affairs in the Hands of a Foreigner. The Truth is, the King, uncapable of holding the Reins of the Government himself, did little else but lend his Name to the Queen, who made use of it as she pleased. For his part, he minded nothing but his Devotions, wherein the Queen took care to cause him to spend his whole Time as, in the only Thing he was fit for, to the End she might take him off from the Thoughts of the Government. Some have been very desirous of making a Saint of this Prince. But it may be said, that he was one of those Saints not so much Praiseworthy for the Virtues they possess, as for the Vices they stand clear of, and to whom a great Weakness of Mind is instead of Merit and Worth. Le. P. d'Orleans.

It was impossible that the Queen and Marquis of Suffolk should rule the Kingdom alone without raising a Jealousy. People had not been used to see Queens take upon them the Government. Wherefore it was with great Uneasiness that they beheld the Queen exercising an arbitrary Power in the King's Name, who had no other share in Affairs, but to set his Hand without Examination to the Orders that were brought to him. The Queen's haughty Carriage, her Partiality in disposing of Places, and above all, the Murder of the Duke of Gloucester, had drawn upon her the Ill-will of the Nation to such a Degree, that she was every where talked of with very little Respect. Her intimate Union with the Marquis of Suffolk, gave her Enemies a fresh Handle to spread Reports not much to her Honour. The Marquis was no less hated than the Queen. He it was that had brought her into England, and in order to make the Match, had sacrificed the Interests of the Kingdom. But the King's Name was so revered, that besides those whose Interest made them side with the Court, abundance of People were of the same Party from the Mo-

The Peoples Disposition with regard to the Queen.

1447.

They begin to talk of the Duke of York's Title to the Crown.

tive of Duty. It was therefore no easy Matter to wrest from the Queen and Favourite the Authority they enjoyed.

The Temper most People were in with regard to the Queen and Ministry, inspired the Duke of York with hopes he should one Day be able to assert his Title to the Crown. He was by his Mother the only Heir of the House of Mer-timer or March, descended from Lionel, Second * Son of Edward III. and elder Brother of John of Gant Duke of Lancaster, whose Posterity was in actual Possession of the Throne. But in all appearance he would never have formed any such Design, if the Duke of Gloucester had been alive, or if the People had not been dissaffected to the Queen and the Ministry. Mean while, as it would have been very dangerous for him to discover his Intentions, before he had sounded the Peoples Inclinations, he took care to proceed in such a Manner, as that it should not be possible to convict him of having made the least Step tending that way. He contented himself with making use of some secret Emis-saries, who industriously spread among the People such things as served to turn their Thoughts to his Title to the Crown. It was whispered about, that the House of Lancaster had usurped the Throne. That indeed, the Usurpation had been tolerable whilst the Kings of that House were Princes of distinguished Worth, and had acted for the Welfare and Honour of the Nation; that even, during the Nonage of the present King, there was a Prospect of his treading in the Steps of his Ancestors, and his being a worthy Follower of the King his Father; but that since he became of Age, nothing glorious was to be expected from him: That therefore the English could have no reason to support any longer the Usurpation of the Crown for the sake of a Queen, who, being sprung from the Blood of their most mortal Enemy, ruled the Kingdom with an arbitrary Power; That in taking a View of the Posterity of Edward III. it evidently appeared that the House of March had been unjustly deprived of the Crown: That the Duke of York being the sole Heir of that House, and descended from from Edward III. by his Father's Side, ought to have his due Right. In fine, that his noble Qualities, his known Virtue, and the signal Services he had done the Nation, very strongly supported the just Title his Birth gave him. These Things dextrously spread among the People, began to gain the Duke of York a Party. But he appeared not himself: every thing was done in private by his Friends.

1447.

Mean while, the Queen, Favourite, and all the House of Lancaster, failed not to take notice of what was handed about concerning the Pretensions of the Duke of York. He might indeed keep himself concealed from others, but it was no easy matter to deceive such quick-sighted Persons, who were so nearly concerned in the Affair. As they did not question in the least but that all these Things were divulged abroad with his Approbation, they believed it requisite to lessen his Credit, by giving him some Mortification. John Duke of Somerset dying during these Transactions, Edmund his Brother, who succeeded him, seemed to be a very proper Person to set against the Duke of York. Wherefore, without any manner of Pretence, the Queen and Marquis of Suffolk managed so, that the King removed the Duke of York from the Regency of France, before his Time was expired, and conferred it upon the new Duke of Somerset. This last was of an exceeding haughty Temper, and as his Brothers had been engaged in pretty great Contests with the Duke of York, he behaved to him upon this Occasion in such a Manner, that he made him his implacable Enemy. On the other Hand, the Duke of York very highly resented this Affront. But as it was not in his Power to be revenged, he dissembled his Resentment, in hopes that Time would furnish him with a fairer Opportunity to show it.

The Court takes from the Duke of York the Regency of France, and gives it to the Duke of Somerset.

In the Beginning of the Year 1448, the King, who was entirely guided by the Directions of the Queen, created the Marquis of Suffolk Duke of Suffolk. The Queen one would have thought intended to brave the People, by showing daily her Favours upon that Lord extremely hated by the whole Nation. By so doing she gave her own Enemies great Advantage, who only wanted a Handle to 1448.

The Marquis made Duke of Suffolk,

1445.

stir up the People against her. It is a false Step which those at the Helm frequently make, not to regard the Complaints of the People. As they are always beset with Flatterers, or ignorant of what passes any where but at Court, or imagine that as long as the Majority of the great Men are for them, the rest of the People are to be counted as nothing. But it often happens, that they find to their cost that the great Men and Kings themselves have no more Power than bare private Persons, when they are not backed by the People. This is what we shall have occasion to see more particularly in the Sequel of the present Reign. But we must first return to the Affairs of France, which will afford us yet Matter for several Years.

Mans delivered up to Charles of Anjou.

In the Treaty about the King's Marriage, it was agreed that the City of Mans, and all the English held in Maine, should be delivered up to Charles of Anjou, Uncle of the Queen that was to be. But the Noise this Article had made in England, and the Duke of Gloucester's Opposition, had caused the Restitution to be put off till this Year. In the Month of February, Charles of Anjou, at the Head of some Troops, appeared before Mans in order to take Possession. The French say he besieged the City, and that the Duke of Exeter the Governor, not daring to stand an Assault, surrendered by Capitulation. But it is certain that the Duke of Exeter was not at that time in the Place, neither was there any Appearance of a Siege. The Restitution was made by Agreement between the two Courts, and Henry sent to Mans two Commissioners to give up the City to the Prince of Anjou. Just as he was going to enter, the two Commissioners met him upon the Bridge, and made a formal Protestation before a publick Notary, declaring that the sole Intent of the King of England in restoring that Place, was purely to procure a final Peace between him and Charles his Uncle, and during the Truce only. Moreover, he reserved to himself the Sovereignty of the City and Province, and that in case any Attempt should be made upon the Right of this Sovereignty, he claimed a Power to revoke the Cession without injuring his Honour. Charles of Anjou heard the Protestation without

Henry's Protestation
Act. Pub.
XI. 204.

out giving his Approbation, and took Possession of the Place. 1448.

After the surrender of Mans to the French, the Negotiations about a Peace, and an Interview of the two Kings were continued. But by reason of some Difficulties, they were obliged once more to prolong the Truce to April the 1st 1449. It did not last however so long, an unforeseen Accident put an End to it sooner than it was expected. The Truce is prolonged. p. 199.

About the Middle of this Year Surienne the Arragonian, who had served the King of England twenty Years, and was Knight of the Garter, and Governour of lower Normandy, carried by Scalado in the Night the Town of Fougeres belonging to the Duke of Bretagne, and got a great Booty. Upon this News the Duke of Bretagne immediately sent a Herald to the Duke of Somerset who was then at Roan, and demanded the Restitution of the Place with all that had been plundered. The Regent replied, that he was extremely troubled at what was done, and would give the Duke of Bretagne all the Satisfaction he could reasonably expect. Surienne surprises Fougeres. The Duke of Bretagne complains of it. The Regent promises Satisfaction.

Mean while, as it would take up some Time to enquire more particularly into this Affair, and notify it to the Court of England, the Duke of Bretagne impatient of the least Delay, complained to the King of France of the Breach of the Truce wherein Bretagne was expressly included. Charles considering that his Affairs were in a good Posture, and those of England in great Disorder, as well by reason of the King's Inability as of the People's Discontent, took Fire at this News as if the Injury had been done to himself. And yet to look back on the Proceedings of the late Duke of Bretagne, during the whole former War, Charles had no great Reason to be well satisfied with that House. Be that as it will, perceiving that a favourable Opportunity offered to renew the War, whilst the English thought nothing of the Matter, he sent a Gentleman to the Duke of Somerset, and two Ambassadors to London to demand Satisfaction for this Insult. But at the same Time to make all Reparation impracticable, he insisted upon the Payment of sixteen Hundred Thousand Crowns to the Duke of Bretagne. 1448. The Duke of Bretagne carries his Complaints to the King of France, who takes the Thing to Heart. The King of France demands an extravagant Satisfaction for the Duke of Bretagne.

1448.

tagne, for the Damage he had sustained by the taking of Fongeres. This Sum was so exorbitant, that it must not be wondered at if the Court of England offered not to pay it down. Besides it was next to impossible that in so short a Time a just Calculation could be made of the Damages the English had done. They could not even help thinking it very strange that Charles should so eagerly espouse the Duke of Bretagne's Quarrel, he not being included in the Truce as his Ally, but rather as a neutral Prince who had frequently served for Mediator between the two Kings.

Answer of the Court of England.

Answer was returned however to the Ambassadors, that the King would take care to make the Duke amends, as soon as it should be known what his Loss might amount to; and that if Charles would send Ambassadors to Louviers, the King of England would do the same, in order to settle all Things to the common Satisfaction of the two Kings and the Duke of Bretagne.

The Conference at Louviers,

At the Congress held at Louviers, the English represented, that the taking of Fongeres was done without Orders; and that the Regent knew nothing of the Matter before it was over. They exclaimed likewise against the Sum demanded, as vastly beyond what the Duke of Bretagne could lawfully challenge. But the French plainly told them, that if they gave not the Duke the Satisfaction their Master demanded, he held the Truce for broken. This haughty and peremptory way of treating on Charles's Part, seemed very strange to the English; but the French resolutely persisting in their first Demand, the Conference broke up and nothing was done.

1070 Purpose.

Charles seeks occasion to renew the War.

So bent was Charles upon renewing the War, whilst the King of England was unprovided for his Defense, that in Case the English had resolved to give the Satisfaction required, he had another Pretence ready for a Rupture. He pretended they had violated the Truce with Scotland, and that he was obliged to take in Hand the Cause of the Scots. Indeed there had been a Conflict between the English and Scots, wherein the English had been worsted. Buchanan makes it a pitched Battle, and says, the English lost three Thousand Men. However this Affair does not seem to have have been of so great Consequence, seeing it was presently stifled. This Year the two Nations renewed their Truce without setting any fixed Time to it. Only it was agreed, that if either of the two Kings should have a Mind to break it, he should give the other warning of it so long beforehand. Be that as it will, King James had not desired Charles to take his Quarrel upon him, and consequently it is evident, that Charles sought an Occasion of breaking with the King of England.

1448.

Whilst Charles was making his Preparations, he amused the English with fruitless Negotiations. One cannot enough wonder at the Imprudence of the Court of England at this Juncture. They knew neither how to preserve the Truce, nor prepare for War. If they had been willing to avoid a Rupture, they should at least have restored Fougeres to the Duke of Bretagne, with Promise of Amends for all Damages. But they kept that Place without using hardly any Endeavour to appease the incensed Duke. A Spirit of Inconsideration seemed to have seized the Council, where greater Care was taken to thrust in the Queen's and Duke of Suffolk's Creatures, than Persons qualified to manage the Publick Affairs. To see the Indolence of the Queen upon this Occasion, one would have thought that finding herself without Issue, she was in a Plot with the King's Enemies, in order to dispossess him of all he still held in France. If she and her Favourites and Ministers, or even the whole Council had such a Design, they succeeded but too well in it. However that be, the Faults they committed upon this Occasion cannot be excused, but by the Consideration of the Haughtiness wherewith Charles acted, who rendered an Accommodation impracticable. But at the same Time they should have provided for their Defense.

1449.

Imprudence of the Council of England.

As soon as Charles saw himself in Condition to renew the War, he caused the Castle of Conches, and Pont de l'Arche in Normandy, and about the same Time Gerboy in Beauvoisis, Cognac, and St. Maigrin in Guienne, to be taken by Surprise in the Duke of Bretagne's Name. The English complained in their Turn of the violation of the Truce; but they were told that it was by way of Reprisals for Fougeres.

Charles surprises several Places of the English by way of Reprisals for Fouge-res.

geres.

1449. geres. Thus the War was rekindled at a Juncture very disadvantageous to the English. As they had made no Preparations, the Duke of Somerset Regent of France, was destitute of Forces when he stood in most need of them. Charles had therefore the Way open to push his Conquests. This gives room to believe that Fongeres was surprized without the Knowledge of the Court of England. Otherwise one cannot help thinking, either that the Ministers had lost their Senses, in not preparing to back their Enterprize, or that they had among them Traitors, who had a mind by that Means to re-engage the English in War, before they had any Thing ready. Certainly when a Man considers that the Court acted so remissly in satisfying the Duke of Bretagne, and so carelessly in providing for the War, he is at a loss what to think of such Management.

Charles acts against Normandy with four Armies.

Charles's chief Aim was to recover Normandy, and to that End he had prepared four Armies. A plain Demonstration he was not desirous that the Business of Fongeres should end in an Accommodation. Since the Congress of Louviers, which broke up in April, he would not have had Time to put so many Forces on Foot. The first of these Armies he headed himself. The Earl of Dunois lately made Earl of Longueville and Generalissimo of the King's Forces under the Constable, commanded the Second. The Duke of Alençon had the Command of the Third, and the Duke of Bretagne led the Fourth, consisting wholly of his own Troops. All the Towns in Normandy were ill provided with Men and Ammunition. Most of the Governours depending upon the Truce, were gone to England. So that the French Armies had nothing more to do than to appear before the Towns in order to carry them. Several Places did not stay to be attacked. Some rise up against the English Garrisons and drove them away. Others were sold by the commanding Officers. Pont Audemer and Chateau Gaillard were the only Places that made a tolerable Defense. In fine, not to enter into the Particulars of all these Sieges, whether real or feigned, it will suffice to say in a Word, that before the Campaign was over, Charles saw himself in Condition to go and besiege Roan, where he had some Friends.

Friends. Having drawn together all his Forces, which made a Body of fifty Thousand Men, he ordered the Capital of Normandy to be invested upon the 8th of October. He would not form a regular Siege, being well assured that the Duke of Somerſet and Earl of Shrewsbury, who were shut up there with three Thousand Men only, would not be able to ſtand againſt the Inhabitants who had promiſed to riſe in his Favour. And indeed within a few Days the Earl of Dunois was going to be let in at St. Hilary's Gate with three Hundred Men, if the Earl of Shrewsbury had not come juſt in the Nick of Time, and beat back that Detachment.

1449.
He inveſts
Roan.

The Inhabitants, norwithſtanding this Diſappointment, perſiſted in their Reſolution. On the 19th of October the whole City having taken up Arms with one Conſent, all that the Duke of Somerſet could do, was to diſtribute his Garrifon in ſome of the moſt advantageous Poſts. But the French being let in, quickly drove them from all their Poſts Sword in Hand. There was only the Palace left, where the Duke of Somerſet and Earl of Shrewsbury had poſted themſelves with eight Hundred Men. As they foreſaw that they ſhould ſoon be in want of Proviſions, the Duke deſired to ſpeak with the King in order to capitulate. His Requeſt being granted, he offered to retire upon honourable Terms. But the King inſiſted upon his ſurrendering at Diſcretion, unleſs he would treat for the reſt of Normandy. Not being able to ſettle this Point, the Duke returned to the Palace and held out ten or twelve Days longer. At laſt he was fain to capitulate, on Condition of leaving behind all his Artillery, paying fifty Thousand Crowns of Gold, and yielding up to the King Candebecc, Argues, Lillebonne, Tancarville, Montrevilliers, and Harſleur. The Earl of Shrewsbury was left in Hoſtage for Security of this Engagement, and the Engliſh Garrifon marched out of Roan, where Charles made his Entry on the 19th of November. The Governour of Harſleur not thinking fit to comply with this Capitulation, the Earl of Longueville was detached by the King to go and beſiege that Place, which ſurrendered in the Beginning of January. Though Charles might juſtly

The Citizens open the Gates to the French.

The Duke of Somerſet ſurrenders upon Terms.

Siege and taking of Harſleur.

1449. ly have detained the Earl of Shrewsbury, since the Capitulation of Roan had not been kept by the English, he was pleased, as a Mark of his Esteem to give him his Liberty without Ransom. In the mean Time the Earl of Foix, who commanded in Guienne for King Charles, took the Castle of Maulcon, standing upon an inaccessible Rock. Thus ended the first Campaign which proved so fatal to the English.

The Earl of Foix takes Maulcon.

Rebellion in Ireland.

The Duke of York sent thither.

He suppresses the Rebellion.

Besides the Concern which the Court of England was under on account of the ill Posture of Affairs in France, a Rebellion raised in Ireland at the same Time gave the Ministry a fresh Cause of Uneasiness. Nevertheless the Queen and Marquis of Suffolk reaped some Advantage by these Commotions, as they furnished them with a Pretence to send off the Duke of York. This Prince beginning to be an Eye-sore to them, they made him Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, under Colour that no Body could suppress the Rebellion so well as he. But withal they gave him but few Troops for that Purpose. They were in hopes that either he would perish in the Attempt, or forfeit his Reputation. The Duke smelt their Design, and had the Address to turn against themselves the Devices they laid for his Ruin. He ordered Matters so, that by his mild and obliging Behaviour he won the Irish, and brought them back to their Duty without being obliged to use any Force. What is more, he found Means to make them his Friends in such a manner that from thenceforward they were always devoted to the Service of himself and his Family, even in the midst of his greatest Misfortunes.

1450. Complaints of the People against the Duke of Suffolk and the Queen.

The universal Confusion of the Affairs of France, the Negligence of the Court in that Respect, the Loss of almost all Normandy in one single Campaign, after the shedding of so much Blood in the Conquest of it, began at length to stir up openly the impatient Temper of the English. The whole Kingdom rung with Complaints against the Duke of Suffolk. It was publickly said, that he had betrayed the State, and that Maine the Key of Normandy had been given up to the French on the Score of a Marriage, which was advantageous to none but himself alone. He was accused of being 1450.

being the principal Contriver of the Death of the Duke of Gloucester, for fear that clear-sighted Prince should see through his treasonable Practices. People complained that there were but few Persons of Parts, and still fewer of Honesty in the Council; that on the contrary the Board was filled with wicked Counsellors, without Principles of Honour or Religion, to the end no Consideration might hinder them from being wholly devoted to the Will and Pleasure of the Queen and her Minister: That it was the same Thing with regard to those in publick Posts, in whom Honesty and Ability were not so much required, as an Attachment to the Ministry. They were no less dissatisfied with the Queen. They complained that she ruled with insupportable Pride a free Nation, which had been used to be governed solely by Laws, and had never bore with a despotick Power, adding that the Usurpation of such a Power was not to be suffered even in a King, much less in a foreign Queen. They took notice likewise, that by Degrees she had turned out of the Council all those that gave her any Umbrage, in order to substitute in their Room such as were at her beck, without troubling herself whether they were fit for so high an Office.

In this Temper were the People when the Parliament met in the Beginning of the Year 1450. The Court stood in need of a Parliament for an Aid to enable them to set Things to rights in France: Otherwise they saw themselves obliged entirely to throw up Matters there, and by that Means give their Enemies a further Handle against them. The Queen soon found that the general Discontent had seized the very Members of Parliament. She believed she should carry her Point by causing the Parliament to be removed to Leicester, where she was in hopes she should have greater Sway than at London, of whose Inhabitants she was jealous. But she met with so strong Opposition from the Lords that she was fain to drop her Design. Apparently they were afraid of something like what had been done at St. Edmunds-bury with regard to the Duke of Gloucester.

The Parliament meets

The Queen tries in vain to adjourn it to Leicester.

1450.

Upon the meeting of the Parliament, the lower House exhibited before the Lords an Impeachment against the Earl of Suffolk containing the following Articles.

Articles of Impeachment against Suffolk.

I. That the Duke of Suffolk had treated with the Bastard of Orleans and the other French Ambassadors to persuade King Charles to invade England. That his End in this, was to place his Son on the Throne, by marrying him with Margaret only Daughter of John Duke of Somerset.

II. That being bribed by the French, he had set the Duke of Orleans at Liberty, against the express Orders of the late King.

III. That Normandy was invaded by his Means, and by his Counsels.

IV. That being Ambassador in France, he had engaged to get Maine restored to the French, without letting the rest of the Ambassadors know any Thing of the Matter, and that he had imposed upon the King and Council, in order to get them to ratify his Engagement.

V. That he had informed the Enemies of the Weakness of the English Towns in France, and encouraged them to assault them.

VI. That he had disclosed the Secrets of the Council to the Enemies of the State.

VII. That he had hindered the Conclusion of a Peace, by discovering the Weakness of England.

VIII. That he had made his Boasts, in the hearing of several Lords, that his Credit at the Court of France was no less than at that of England.

IX. That he had obstructed the sending of Succours to France, that the Enemies might make the greater Progress.

X. That he had included in the Treaty of Truce, neither the King of Aragon nor Duke of Bretagne, and by that affected Omission England had lost those two Allies.

The Duke's Defence.

The Duke of Suffolk replied to these Accusations, by a formal Denial of the greatest Part, and demanded that the Evidences they pretended to go upon, might be communicated cated to him. As to the Articles which he owned, he produced the King's express Orders. But that was not sufficient to justify him, since his chief Crime was the making an ill use of his Credit with the King, and imposing upon the Council. Historians remark, that he cleared himself of all but the last Article relating to the Duke of Bretagne. Indeed, it is certain that in the first Treaty of Truce concluded at Tours, and in several subsequent ones made to prolong the Truce, the Duke of Bretagne was not included but on the Part of France. This is a Mystery not very easy to be unravelled. We have seen heretofore that the Duke of Bedford had obliged the Duke of Bretagne to renounce the Alliance of Charles, and acknowledge Henry for King of France. Since that Time, there had been no Rupture between England and Bretagne. And yet Charles took care to get the Duke of Bretagne included in the Treaty of Truce concluded at Tours; but the English made no mention of him. Was it out of Negligence, Forgetfulness, or on set Purpose? The last is most likely. However, the Duke of Suffolk had in some measure repaired this Omission, by including the Duke of Bretagne as an Ally of England, in the prolonging of the Truce in 1447, as appears by the Collection of Publick Acts. But that was not enough it seems to satisfy his Enemies.

Remark on the last Article.

1450.

The Queen perceiving that Matters were like to go ill with the Duke, ordered it so, that the King sent him to the Tower. This was done not so much with Design to punish him, as to give some Appearance of Satisfaction to the Commons. Mean while, for fear they should obstinately persist in prosecuting him, she got the Parliament adjourned to Leicester. Presently after, the Duke came out of the Tower, and took his old Post at Court. The News of his Release raised a Sedition in Kent, headed by a Fowler *. But before the Rebels could attempt any thing considerable, the Ring-leaders were apprehended and executed, and by that Means the Sedition was stifled in its Birth.

The King
sends the Duke to the Tower.

The Parliament adjourned to Leicester.
The Duke is freed.

A Seditious in Kent.

The

* A desperate Fellow, who stiled himself Blue-board.

1459.
The Parliament sits again.
The Commons offended at the Duke of Suffolk's appearing.

He is banished.

He is beheaded in his Passage to France.
April.

The Parliament being met again at Leicester, the King and Queen appeared, attended by the Duke of Suffolk in quality of Prime Minister. The Commons were extremely offended at this Procedure, which they considered as done in Contempt of them. To show their Resentment, they went in a Body and petitioned the King, that they who had been instrumental in giving up Normandy to the French, might be punished according to their Demerits. The Queen was alarmed at this Petition. She found that the Commons were bent upon the Duke of Suffolk's Ruin, and that there was no way to help it but by coming to an open Quarrel with the Lower-House. Wherefore, to save the Minister some part of the Punishment which in all likelihood was designed him, she resolved to prevent a formal Sentence, which could not but have been a very severe one in the present Juncture. A few Days after receiving the Petition, the King banished the Duke the Realm for five Years, and turned out all his Creatures. The Duke looking himself upon his Exile as a proper Means to screen him from the Fury of the People, speedily embarked for France. But he could not escape his Destiny. He was met in his Passage by an English Man of War, commanded by one Nicholas, who having a mind to search the Ship the Duke was in, and finding him there, ordered his Head to be chopped off without any further Ceremony *. Thus fell William de la Pole Duke of Suffolk, who a few Days before saw himself the greatest and most powerful Person in the Kingdom. It is uncertain whether he was guilty of all the Crimes the Commons laid to his Charge: But it cannot be denied, that the Disasters which one in the Neck of another happened to the Affairs of the English in France, are

* Dugdale, from Hollingshead, says, the Ship (belonging to the Duke of Exeter, then Constable of the Tower) was called the Nicholas of the Tower, and not the Captain. The Duke's Body was taken up and buried in the Collegiate Church of Wingfield in Suffolk. He was beheaded, says Dugdale, May 2. He served 24 Years in France, and 17 without ever returning home. He was Privy Counsellor 15 Years, and a Knight of the Garter 30. His Dutcheß Alice, Daughter and Heir of Chaucer, died in 14 Edward 4. and was buried at Exelme, in the Church of her own founding.

are to be imputed to his ill Conduct, supposing it true that they are not to be considered as the Consequences of a Plot contrived on purpose to make the King lose all his Conquests in France.

By the Death of the Duke of Suffolk, the Duke of York saw himself rid of a potent Enemy, who, being attached to the House of Lancaster, would doubtless have strongly opposed the Execution of his Designs. Though York was in Ireland, yet his Friends effectually served him in England, by crying up his Merit, and representing to the People the King's Incapacity, and the Queen's Male-Administration. These Discourses joined to the entire Loss of Normandy, which happened at the same Time, made deep Impressions on the Minds of the People, and daily increased the Number of the Duke's Adherents. He had perfect Information of all Matters. But, not to hazard himself to no purpose, he devised an Expedient, which he thought proper to sound the Peoples Inclinations, to the end he might take his Measures with the greater Safety. By his Instigation, an Irishman, one Jack Cade, took the Name of John Mortimer of the House of March, who had been executed in the Beginning of this Reign. Under this borrowed Name he repaired into Kent, where the Duke of York had many Friends, and drew together great Numbers of Male-Contents, using for Pretence the Necessity there was of reforming the Government and easing the People. In the Temper the greatest Part of the Nation was in with regard to the Court, the Rebels increased to such a Degree, that in few Days Cade saw himself in Condition to go and incamp on Black-Heath, hard by London.

The Duke of York aspires to the Crown;

Jack Cade's Insurrection in Kent.

He approaches London.

The King having notice of the Approach of the Rebels, sent to demand the Reason of their appearing thus in Arms. Cade answered in the Name of All, that they had no ill Design upon the King's Person : That their Intention was to petition the Parliament to order Matters so, that the evil Ministers might be brought to condign Punishment, and the People live more happily than they had done for some Years past. A few Days after they presented to the Parliament two Petitions, setting forth the Grievances of the Nation,

He presents two Petitions to the Parliament.

1450.

The King marches against them.

Cade resires, and cuts in pieces a Detachment of the King's Army.

Cade is let into London.

He beheads the High-Treasurer.

Nation. Among other Things they prayed, that the Duke of Somerset might be punished, as being the principal Author of the Loss of Normandy. That the King's Council might be filled with the Princes of the Blood, and other prudent and judicious Persons. and not with vicious and profligate Men, of ill Principles and Manners, and incapable of managing the Affairs of the State. These Petitions being communicated to the King, the Council condemned them as seditious, and resolved to suppress the Rebellion by Force of Arms. Whereupon, the King having drawn together a Body of Fifteen Thousand Men, headed them himself, and marched against the Rebels. Upon his Approach Cade, making as if he was afraid, retreated, and went and lay in Ambush in Sevenoak-Wood, not questioning but the King would follow him. But Henry imagining the Rebels were dispersed, returned to London, being contented with sending after them a Detachment of his Army commanded by the Lord *Stafford. This Detachment falling into the Ambush were cut in Pieces, and the Leader himself lost his Life in the Fight.

At the same Time Cade began his March towards London, whilst the King and his whole Court hastily retired to Kenelworth-Castle, leaving a Garrison in the Tower under the Command of the Lord Scales. Cade's Success against Stafford increased his Army with prodigious Multitudes, who ran from all Parts to join him. The City of London, either out of fear or from some other Motive, opened her Gates to the Rebels, and Cade entered as it were in Triumph, at the Head of his Troops. But he prohibited under severe Penalties the doing any Injury to the Inhabitants. Next Day, being informed that the Lord Say High-Treasurer was in the City, he ordered him to be apprehended and beheaded*. Towards the Evening he retired to Southwark.

* This was Sir Humphrey Stafford Knight, a collateral Branch of the Family of Humphrey de Stafford Duke of Buckingham.

† James Fines, who by reason his Mother was Sister and Coheir to William de Say, a Descendent of the former Baron de Say, was created 25 Hen. 6. a Baron by the Title of Lord Say and Seie. He was accused with Southward, on the other Side of the Thames, and continued for some Days, to go into the City in the Morning, and out again at Night, on purpose to take from the Citizens all Occasion of Fear.

1450.

Cade's Soldiers and the Londoners lived at first very friendly together. But at length, the Soldiers having committed some Riot in the City, when they would have come in as usual, in the Morning they found the Bridge-Gate shut against them. Whereupon a Battle ensued between them and the Citizens, which lasted all Day, and ended at the Approach of Night, by a Suspension of Arms till the Morrow. Mean while the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Chancellor, who had taken Refuge in the Tower, having observed by their Spies, and the Motions of the Rebels, that their Hearts began to fail them, instantly drew up an Act of Indemnity, set the Great Seal to it, and caus'd it to be proclaimed in the Night in Southwark. The Pardon produced so sudden and wonderful an Effect, that before it was Day Cade found himself deserted by his Followers, and constrained to fly by himself in order to go and conceal himself in the County of Sussex. But the King having promised by Proclamation, a Thousand Marks to any Person that should bring him dead or alive, he was slain in his lurking Hole by [Alexander Eden] a Gentleman of Kent, who brought his Body to London *. The Pardon under the Great Seal did not hinder but that abundance of his Accomplices were put to Death. Thus ended this dangerous Rebellion, which might have been attended with more fatal Consequences, had it been conducted by a more experienced Leader.

Quarrel
between the Soldiers and Citizens.

Fight on the Bridge.

Cade is deserted.

and slain.

with the Duke of Sussex about the Affair of Maine, and thereupon to appease the People was turned out from being High-Treasurer, and upon the Clamours of the Rebels was sent to the Tower, from whence they fetched him and arraigned him at Guild-Hall before the Mayor: Then hurrying him to the Standard in Cheap, they cut off his Head, and dragged his naked Body at a Horse-Tail into Southwark, where it was hanged and quartered. Dugdale.

* He was stiled Captain Mend-All.

1450.
Continuation of the War in Normandy Kiriell brings a Supply from England.
He marches towards Caen.

The Battle of Fourmigni wherein the English are worsted.

Charles compleats the Conquest of Normandy.

Whilst these Things passed in England, the War continued in Normandy. But always to the Disadvantage of the English. The Queen perceiving that the People's Discontents partly arose from the ill Success of the Affairs of France, had attempted to send fifteen Hundred Men to the Duke of Somerset, under the Command of Sir Thomas Kiriell, who landed at Cherburg. His Design was to lead his Troops to Caen where the Duke of Somerset then was. But as it was hazardous to march with so small a Body of Troops, he was join'd upon the Road by several Detachments of the English Garrisons in those Parts. The French Authors say, that altogether the English Army amounted to five Thousand Men, which however is not very likely. Be that as it will, the Constable Richmond having had Intelligence of Kiriell's Design, speedily drew together a Body of seven Thousand Men, and went and expected him at Fourmigni, by which Place he was to pass. The Armies having join'd Battle, the English, though the Odds were against them, defended themselves a good while with great Bravery. But at length, in spite of their obstinate Resistance, they were put to rout, and their General taken Prisoner. Upon comparing this Battle with a certain Prediction of the Maid of Orleans, importing that the English should be entirely driven out of the Kingdom, by a Defeat much greater than those of Orleans and Patay, one is inclined to believe that she was not really inspired. The Truth is, in the Battle of Fourmigni, the only one that was fought since the Death of la Pucelle, the English, even according to their Enemies computation were at most but five Thousand strong, and their Loss exceeded not fifteen Hundred. But yet in order to make the best of the Prophecy, the French Writers talk of the Battle of Fourmigni in a very high Strain, comparing it to the most famous Battles.

Kiriell's Reinforcement being defeated, the Duke of Somerset could no longer make Head against the victorious Arms of the French. It would be needless to give a particular Account of the Sieges carried on by the French in this second Campaign. It will suffice to say in a Word, that that about the middle of August, Charles saw himself Master of all Normandy. The City of Caen was invested the 4th of June, and on the 21st of the same Month, the Duke of Somerset capitulated, against the Opinion of some of the Officers, who maintained that it was not yet Time. Falaise, Dampfront, and Cherburg were besieged at once, and the Campaign ended in Normandy with the taking of Cherburg, which surrendered the 12th of August. Thus in two Campaigns Charles became Master of the whole Province, without so much as one single Town remaining in the Hands of the English.

1450.

The Duke of Somerset surrenders Caen.

The Parliament met at Westminster on the 10th of November, and about the same Time the Duke of Somerset having nothing more to do in France, came to England. He was blamed for the Loss of Normandy, and particularly of Caen, where he was accused of not having done his Duty. These Complaints were so publickly made, that the House of Commons could not help taking notice of them. They presented a Petition to the King accordingly, praying him to send the Duke of Somerset to the Tower, that his Conduct might be inquired into. Henry not thinking proper to disoblige the Commons at such a Juncture, granted their Request. The Populace of London were so transported with Joy upon News of the Duke being in the Tower, that they went out of Hand and plundered his Palace. They would have proceeded further, if the King had not speedily issued out a Proclamation to disperse them. This hindered not some of the most Audacious from continuing the Tumult, till such Time as one of the most insolent had his Head struck off. The Parliament was no sooner broke up, but the Duke of Somerset came out of his Confinement, and took at Court the Post the Duke of Suffolk had enjoy'd.

The Parliament meets. The Duke of Somerset arrives in England.

He is sent to the Tower.

His Palace is plundered.

He comes out of the Tower, and is Prime Minister.

The English, not having been able to prevent the Loss of Normandy, had it still left in their Power to defend Guienne which was further off. King Charles taking Advantage of the present Juncture, had already sent his Troops into that Province, where this very Year his Generals took Bergerac, Gensac, Montferrand, Chalais, St. Foi, which Charles takes several Places in Guienne.

1450. made but a very faint Resistance. The Season which was very far advanced, hindered them from carrying on their Conquests.

The Earl of Orval beats the Train'd-Bands of Bourdeaux. During the Winter, the Earl of Orval of the House of A. bret, making Inroads up to the very Gates of Bourdeaux, the Mayor of the City sallied out with ten Thousand Men to attack him. How inferior soever Orval might be in Numbers, he stood his Ground against these undisciplined Trained-Bands, slew great Part of them; and took abundance of Prisoners.

1451. Great Progress of the French in Guienne. In the Month of April 1451, the Army of France commanded by the Bastard of Orleans Earl of Danvis and Langueville were forty Thousand strong. This General presently became Master of Montegnon, in Saintonge. Then on May the 10th, he besieged Blaye, and carried it on the 21st. The English not only had no Army in the Field, but did not seem so much as to have any Thoughts of defending Guienne. The French General improving so favourable a Juncture, divided his Army into four Bodies, the most considerable of which he commanded himself. He gave the Command of the other three to the Earls of Foix, Pontievre, and Armagnac. All these Generals made several Conquests apart without much Trouble. Libourn, Castillon, Dacs, Rioure, Bourg, surrendered in a little Time. Fronfac, the strongest Place of the Province, held out but three Days; however the Castle made a brave Defense.

Bourdeaux and the rest of Guienne treat with Charles. The Inhabitants of Guienne seeing themselves thus deserted by the King of England, thought it Time to provide for their Safety. The States of the Province being assembled at Bourdeaux in the Month of June, resolved voluntarily to submit to King Charles, in order to avoid the utter Ruin which hung over their Heads. Pursuant to this Resolution, they concluded with the Earl of Danvis a Treaty, whereby they obliged themselves to submit to the Dominion of the King of France, in Case before the 24th of the same Month, they were not relieved by an Army able to give Battle. The French General could grant that Condition without any Apprehension, since he was well assured they were in no readiness in England to assist Guienne. The Guienne surrenders to Charles, except Bayonne.

Army

Army not appearing, all the Towns of the Dutchy opened their Gates to the French, except Bayonne, which refused to be included in the Treaty. This Place, the only one the English had left, was invested the sixth of August. The Breach being large enough on the 19th of the same Month, the Besiegers prepared to Storm; but the Inhabitants saved them the Labour by rising in Arms and obliging the Garrison to capitulate. The French Historians say, that a white Cross was seen in the Air just over the Town, an evident Sign of the Protection God afforded France.

1451. which is forced to capitulate.

Whilst the Court of England suffered Guienne to be lost without minding it, they grew extremely uneasy with regard to the Duke of York. As in the Kentish Rebellion, Jack Cade had taken the Name of Mortimer, it was easy to perceive that his Aim had been to see how the People stood affected to the House of March. Consequently it might be inferred from thence, that he had been set to work by the Duke of York sole Heir of that Family. Indeed the Thing was palpable, but there was no Evidence to convict the Duke, because Cade was slain. Besides, in the Temper People were in with regard to the Court, they would infallible have taken the Duke of York's Part, in Case he had been, by being publicly attacked, forced to stand upon his Defense. Mean while, as he was suspected of hatching some Plot in Ireland, and of designing to bring an Army of Irish into England, the King sent Orders to the Sheriffs of Wales, Shropshire, and Cheshire, to be in a readiness to hinder his Landing. This Precaution produced several ill Effects. In the first Place, it let the People see that the Court was afraid of the Duke of York, which it would have been better to conceal, for fear of giving them Occasion to inquire into the Reason. In the next Place, the Duke found that it was his Business to be upon his Guard: Whereas, if the Court had feigned to know nothing of his Designs, they might have caused him to fall into some Snare, or given him Room to make some false Step, which would have afforded a Handle against him. In fine, they furnished him with a Pretence to complain, since he was so far from being convicted of having form'd any Project

The Court's uneasiness with regard to the Duke of York.

The King orders his Landing to be opposed.

Ill Effects of this Accusation.

1451.

*The Duke complains to the King.
His Answer.*

Project against the King; that he had not apparently done any Thing on which an Accusation could be grounded. Wherefore he wrote to the King, complaining of this Suspicion, which he pretended to look upon as extremely injurious, and as a mere Pretence to ruin him. The King sent him a very civil Answer, giving him some sort of Satisfaction; however he revoked not his Orders.

The Duke persists in his Designs in spite of all Difficulties.

Though Cade's Attempt had miscarried, the Duke of York reaped the Benefit he intended by it. The vast Numbers of People that had embarked in it plainly discovered how much the Nation was displeased with the Queen and Ministry, and that the Remembrance of the Rights of the House of March was not entirely lost. Wherefore, instead of being discouraged, he entertained fresh Hopes. He judged that if the mere Shadow of one of his Family was capable of causing so great Multitudes to take up Arms, much more would they be attached to a Prince of the Blood-Royal, sole Heir of the House of March. Mean while, not to be too hasty in the Execution of a Project of such Moment, he resolved before he attempted any Thing, to consult his Friends. The Time of his Government of Ireland being expired, he embarked for England. But when he would have landed in Wales, he found at the Port the Militia up in Arms ready to oppose him. This prevented him not from going and landing at another Place, which was not so strongly guarded. He did this the more boldly, as he had none but his own Servants with him, and as they had yet no Handle against him. Then he repaired to London, from whence the Court was gone some Time before in Progress to the Western Counties.

*He returns
to England.*

He concerts Measures with his Friends.

The Duke of York was impatiently expected at London. His Friends had frequently conferred together in his Absence, but had not been able to come to any Resolution without him. His principal Adherents were John Mowbray Duke of Norfolk, Richard Nevil Earl of Salisbury, Son-in-law to the General of the same Name * who was again

* Son-in-law of Thomas de Montacute Earl of Salisbury, in right of lain before Orleans, Richard Nevil his Son who was shortly after Earl of Warwick, by his Marriage with Ann Beauchamp Daughter of the Earl of Warwick who died in France, Thomas Courtney Earl of Devonshire, though Son-in-law of the Duke of Somerset *, and Edward Brook Baron of Cobham. With these Lords the Duke immediately after his Arrival concerted the Measures he had to take, in order to accomplish his Designs. The Result of their Consultations was, that the Duke should retire into Wales, where the March-Family had always had great Interest; that he should privately make sure of being able to raise an Army in Season, by the Help of his Friends; That he should then write to the King, warning him of the People's Disaffection to the Ministry, and particularly to the Duke of Somerset.

In Pursuance to this Resolution, the Duke having repaired into Wales and taken all his Measures, sent the King Word that all the Kingdom was dissatisfied that Traitors were screened from Justice, and took the Freedom to advise him to prevent the ill Consequences that this Discontent might be attended with: That the speediest Means would be to order that the Guilty might be brought to their Tryal, and particularly the Duke of Somerset, who having been impeached by the House of Commons, had been restored to Favour without having his Conduct examined into. In fine, that if he would be pleased to give the Nation this Satisfaction, he offered to assist in the Execution of so good a Design. The Ministry easily perceived that the Duke of York sought an Occasion to quarrel. But as in the present Posture of Affairs they durst not carry it with a high Hand, it was judged proper that the King should send the Duke a civil Answer, which would disappoint him of the Pretence he wanted. Accordingly the King in

He retires into Wales, and writes to the King to reform the Government.

The King sends him a mild Answer.

of whose sole Daughter and Heir, he had the Title of Earl of Salisbury. He was eldest Son by a second Wife to Ralph Nevil Earl of Westmoreland.

* He was Son-in-law to John Earl of Somerset (eldest Son of John Duke of Lancaster, by Catharine Swinford) and Brother-in-law to Edmund Duke of Somerset, third Son of the said John.

1451.

his Letter to him told him, that he had resolved some Time since to reform whatever might be amiss in the Government; that therefore his Intent was to appoint a certain Number of Persons of Virtue and Parts for his Counsellors; of whom he intended him for one: That as to the Traitors mentioned in his Letter, his Design was not to let them go unpunished, but as the Affair was of very great Consequence, it required mature Deliberation: That as to the Duke of Somerset in particular, he meant not to screen him from answering to the Accusations that should be laid to his Charge.

1452.

The Duke marches to London with an Army.

The King goes out to meet him.

Though this Answer took from the Duke of Tork all Pretence of taking up Arms, he imagined however that the King's bare Refusal to remove or punish the Ministers he complained of, was a sufficient Warrant so to do. He did not expect so mild an Answer. Mean while, as he had already taken his Measures to raise an Army, he did not think proper to break them, or suffer himself to be decoyed by a Moderation which might be as well feigned as real. And therefore having put himself at the Head of his Army, he marched towards London. But he found the Queen had not been so neglectful as he had expected. Upon Notice of the Duke's retiring into Wales, she had ordered Troops to be levied in the King's Name, without making known what they were intended for. So that the Duke was no sooner upon his March, but he heard that the King was advancing towards him in order to give him Battle. Though he wanted neither Courage nor Experience, he thought it not best to venture to join Battle with the King, without having a more plausible Pretence than what he would have covered his Designs with. His Aim was to win the People to his Side; but to fight the King without a more specious Reason, was not the Way to Compas his Ends, though he could have been sure of carrying the Day. Besides, looking upon the City of London as being able to make the Balance incline to his Side, he judged that before all Things he should try to make sure of the Metropolis. For this Reason, as soon as he had received News that the King was coming against him, he altered on a sudden his

London-Gates shut against the Duke.

Rout

1452.

Rout, and by speedy Marches got before him, and went and appeared before London, where he expected to be received with open Arms; but he had the Mortification to find the Gates shut, the Inhabitants not thinking proper to declare for him, whilst the King was so close at his Heels with a stronger Army than his. He was fain therefore to go and pass the Thames at Kingston, in order to encamp at Burnt-Heath, twelve Miles from London. The King following him, passed the River over London-Bridge, and encamped about four Miles from him.

The two Armies being so near one another, that nothing could hinder them from engaging, the King sent to the Duke two Bishops, to know what had induced him to appear in Arms. As the Duke saw himself disappointed of gaining London to his Side, he thought it his wisest Course to carry it fair with the Court, for fear of ruining his Affairs by too hasty Resolutions. In this Opinion he answered, that he had never intended to forsake his Allegiance to the King, but only to remove from his Person evil Counsellors, of whom the Duke of Somerſet was the principal: That if the King would be pleased to order Somerſet again to Prison, and keep him there as long as the Parliament had decreed, he was ready to dismiss his Troops. He did not expect that his Demand would be granted, since the King and Queen were solely guided by the Counsels of him whose Interest it was to have it rejected. He was in hopes by that to throw all the Blame on the Court, and let the People see that the Ministry did not scruple to expose the Kingdom to a Civil War, for the sake of a Man odious to the Nation. But for once he was out-witted by his own Policy. The King took him at his Word, promised to send his Enemy to the Tower, and ordered him to be apprehended forthwith. The Duke of York was surprized at this Condescension. He would very fain have gone back from his Engagement. But as he could not do it without laying himself too open, he thought best to run some Risk, rather than hazard the Loss of the People's Good-Will, on which he grounded all his Expectations. Wherefore without any delay, he disbanded his Troops and came to Court,

The King sends to know why the Duke had taken up Arms.

*The Duke offers to submit if Somerſet is sent back to the Tower.*

He is taken at his Word.

*He dismisses his Troops, and comes and accuses the Duke of Somerſet,* 1452. who suddenly appears and accuses him.

The Duke of York is apprehended.

Reasons which win-dered the Court from putting him to Death.

He is set at Liberty.

not deigning so much as to take any Precaution for his Safety. When he was come into the King's Presence, he accused the Duke of Somerſet with great Warmth, and endeavoured to perſwade the King that he was a Traitor, and one that had ſacrificed the Intereſt of the Kingdom to his Ambition and Avarice. Upon theſe Words, the Duke of Somerſet, who was hid behind the Hangings, ſuddenly ſtept forth to answer him, and accused him of having conſpired to dethrone the King. The Duke of York ſeeing his Enemy whom he thought in Conſinement ſtanding before him, and in the King's Apartment, found he had been amuſed, and perceived the Danger he was in. Nevertheless, without ſhowing any concern, he modeſtly complained that they had broke their Word with him, by the Suggeſtions of the Duke of Somerſet, on whom he caſt the Baſeneſs of this Fraud. Immediately after the King diſmiſſed the Duke of York, and ordered him to be apprehended as ſoon as he was gone out of his Preſence.

If the Duke of York's Enemies had dared to gratify their Reſentment, he would never have got out of the Snare he had imprudently fallen into. But the Poſture of Affairs and the Temper of the People, affording juſt Occaſion of Fear, they durſt not proceed againſt him. Two other Reasons helped likewise to ſave him. It was rumoured at Court, that the young Earl of March his Son, attended by all the Friends of his Family, was advancing with a ſtrong Body of Troops to free his Father. Wherefore for fear the Duke's Army which was lately diſbanded, ſhould join his Son's Troops, the Court was ſain to take a more gentle Courſe. On the other Hand, the Gaiſcons had ſent Deputies to the King, to offer to reduce Guienne to his Obedience, if he would ſend them Supplies. At ſuch a Juncture it was believed, that as the Duke of York's Blood could not be ſpilt without occaſioning a Civil War, there would be a Neceſſity of detaining the Troops intended for Guienne, and thereby a fair Opportunity loſt of recovering that Province. Theſe Conſiderations induced the Queen and Duke of Somerſet to give the Duke of York his Liberty, though their own Intereſts, that of the King and the whole whole House of Lancaster required that he should be sacrificed to their Safety. Perhaps all the Calamities which England endured afterwards, might by that Means have been prevented. Nevertheless, as the Queen and Ministry were willing, as far as in them lay, to guard themselves against his Designs, they obliged him to take an Oath to the King, whereby he swore to remain his faithful Subject till Death, and never to take up Arms against him. This done, the Duke of York retired to his Castle at Wigmore, and the Duke of Somerset enjoyed without a Rival the Authority he had acquired at Court.

1452.

He takes an Oath to the King.

and retires to Wigmore.

Whilst Henry was employed at Home in opposing the Attempts of the Duke of York, Charles had no less an Enemy to encounter in his own Kingdom. The Dauphin his Son, a Prince of a restless Spirit, gave him great Uneasiness by his Behaviour towards him. For some time past he had resided in Dauphine, where he acted as Sovereign, paying but a slight Regard to the King his Father's Orders, and executing them no farther than he thought fit. He had even the Rashness to demand of the Duke of Savoy his Daughter Violante in Marriage; and the Duke had complied with his Request, without either of them vouchsafing to acquaint the King with the Matter. Provok'd at this Proceeding, Charles put himself at the Head of Thirty Thousand Men, and marched towards Lyons, bent upon chastising his Son, and punishing the Boldness of the Duke of Savoy. But the Revolution which happened in Guienne at the same time put him upon taking other Measures.

Quarrel between K. Charles and the Dauphin.

The Gascons, who had been for three hundred Years together under the Dominion of the Kings of England, had not submitted to King Charles, but purely because the English had neglected to succour them. As soon as the French Army had quitted Guienne, the Lords of the County, in concert with the Inhabitants of Bordeaux, resolved to return to their antient Sovereigns. To that Purpose they deputed the Lords of Candale and l'Esparre to go and contrive the Means at London. The Troubles raised by the Duke of York had for some time hindered the Court from being able to attend that Affair. But upon their being ap-

The Gascons offer to return to the King of England.

This Offer is accepted.

1452.

Talbot sent into Gui-
enne.

peased, the Queen and Council maturely weighing the Matter, judged that nothing should be omitted in order to bring it about. Their succeeding in this Undertaking might redeem their Credit, and gain them an Interest among the People, which they stood in need of to bear themselves up against their Enemies. Talbot, the valiant Earl of Shrewsbury, who was returned from a Journey he had made to Italy, was pitched upon for this Expedition. Though he was fourscore Years old, he accepted without Hesitation an Employment which afforded him opportunity to do his King and Country a signal Service once more before he died. As there was an absolute Necessity of being speedy, he forthwith embarked the Troops that were ready, consisting of Seven Thousand Men at Arms, upon Promise that the rest which were designed him should quickly follow. He set Sail the 18th of October, and on the 21st landed near Bordeaux. Next Day he appeared before the City; and as all was prepared beforehand to receive him, he was let in at a Gate which the Citizens had the Guard of. The French Garrison, who had heard nothing of his Arrival, surprized at this unexpected Accident, would have gone out at another Gate, but they were almost all of them stopped.

He is let into Bourdeaux.He retakes several Places in Guienne.

The Reinforcement promised from England being arrived a few Days after, the Earl of Shrewsbury took the Field at the Head of Seven Thousand Men. With this little Army he conquered again some of the Towns of Guienne, among others Fronsac and Castillon, in as short a Space as they were lost. If Winter had not prevented him from pushing his Conquests farther, he would have made himself Master of all Guienne.

1453.

Charles sent 10000 Men into Guienne.

Charles, who was then at Lyon, having heard this ill News, thought it not best obstinately to prosecute the Execution of the Design he had formed. The Affair of Guienne seemed to him of greater Importance. Wherefore altering on a sudden his Resolution, he permitted the Dauphin to marry the Princess of Savoy, and gave one of his Daughters to the young Prince of Piedmont. At the same time, he resolved to send all his Troops into Guienne the next Spring. Mean while, he dispatched before a Body of Ten

Ten Thousand Men, under the Command of Chabanes, and the Earl of Pontievre. These two Generals being arrived in Saintonge, besieged Chalain and Castillon, whilst the Earl of Clermont followed them with the rest of the Army designed for Guienne. Chabanes was taken up with the Siege of Chalain till the Month of June, after which he went and joined Pontievre before Castillon, which still made a vigorous Defence. The Dread which the Valour and Experience of the Earl of Shrewsbury inspired them with, made them use the Precaution seldom practised in those Days, of making Lines, and defending the Avenues of their Camp with Palisadoes.

The Earl of Shrewsbury was at Bordeaux with Six or Seven Thousand Men, in suspense what Course he should take with regard to the Siege. He was very desirous to relieve Bordeaux, but was afraid he should find it extremely difficult, as well by reason of the Intrenchments of the French, as of the Superiority of their Numbers. On the other Hand, being sensible that the Earl of Clermont was advancing with all speed, he considered that there was a Necessity of running this Hazard before the other Troops arrived, after which it would be too late, since he would have all the Forces of France to deal with. In fine, having taken this last Resolution, he set out from Bordeaux with all his Army, and approaching the French Camp, attacked them immediately with a Vigour equal to that which the English had shown at the Battle of Azincourt, and upon several other Occasions. He soon defeated Four Thousand Men commanded by Chabanes without the Intrenchments, drove them back to the Camp, and in spite of the Besiegers Cannon, which carried off his Men by whole Files, forc'd their Lines, and rushed in Pell-mell with the Runaways. Thus the English relate the Matter. But the French only say, that the Lines were just upon the Point of being forced, when the English were attacked in the Rear by a Body of French Horse. This abated their Eagerness, and obliged their General to leave off attacking the Lines, in order to face those that pressed him behind. This Motion gave the French an opportunity to cause all their Troops to come out of the Camp.

Talbot goes and attacks them,

1453.

He is defeated and slain.

Camp. So that the Earl of Shrewsbury, who had not above Five Thousand Men left, saw himself reduced to the Necessity of making two Fronts, and withstanding Ten Thousand Men. At length, the English finding themselves overpowered by Numbers began to give Ground. At the same time, the Earl of Shrewsbury was wounded in the Thigh with a Musquet-Ball, and had his Horse killed under him. In this Condition, not being able to mount on Horseback by reason of his Wound, he bid Sir John Talbot * his Son retire and save himself for another Occasion, wherein he might be further serviceable to his Country. But Talbot rather than basely fly, chose to die by the Earl his Father, who presently after resigned his last Breath also. The English lost Two Thousand Men, but that of their General was much the greater Loss *.

The End of the War in France, with the Loss of Guienne.

After this Defeat, Castillon surrendered on the 16th of July. A few Days after the Earl of Clermont being arrived, and the King having repaired to the Camp, the Army was divided into four Bodies, which besieged at once Cadillac, Libourne, Fronsac, and Bordeaux. Fronsac and Libourne held out but a few Days; but the Castle of Cadillac stood out a Siege of two Months. After the taking of that Place, the whole Army joined before Bordeaux, which capitulated the 17th of October, and the Garrison had liberty to return to England. Thus of so many Conquests the English had made in France since Edward III., they had nothing left but Calais and Guines, poor Remains of so many Provinces, several whereof had belonged to their Kings by Hereditary Right, and others had been won by so many Victories, and at the Expence of so much Blood!

Whilst

* He was eldest Son by Margaret the Earl's second Wife, Daughter of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and created Viscount L'Isle by Hen. 6. The Earl's eldest Son by Maud his first Wife was also called John, who succeeded him in his Honours.

*¹ He was buried at Whitchurch in Shropshire, where a noble Monument is erected for him in the South-wall of the Chancel. In his Epitaph he is stiled, Earl of Shrewsbury, Lord Talbot, Lord Essex, Lord Verdon, Lord Strange of Blackmore, and Marshal of France. Dug.

Whilst the French were carrying on the War with such Success in Guienne, Henry was seized at London with a dangerous Fit of Sickness which held him a good while, and made it often believed he would never recover. At the same time the Queen was brought to Bed on the 23^d of October of a Prince who was christned Edward. This Prince was born in an ill Hour, since it was just as the English lost all their Possessions in France. His Birth gave rise to several Reports which were not at all to the Queen's Honour. There were some bold enough to say publicly, he was not the King's Son. Others maintained, that he was supposititious, grounding their Assertion upon the Queen's not having any Children before, tho' she had been married Nine Years. In fine, some there were, who, without calling in question the Honour or Honesty of the Queen, took Occasion from the Prince's Birth to hope better things for the future. Their Reason was, because the Queen having a Son, would be more firmly attached to the Interest of England, giving to understand plainly enough by that, what they thought of her former Conduct.

1453.
Henry falls sick.

Birth of Edward the King's Son.

Reports to the Queen's Disadvantage.

Cardinal Kemp, who had been translated from the See of York to that of Canterbury, dying in December this Year, Thomas Bouchier, Brother of the Earl of Essex *, was elected Archbishop. He was a Prelate of eminent Merit, and was made afterwards High-Chancellor, and then honoured with the Dignity of Cardinal.

Thomas
Bouchier Archbishop of Canterbury.

The War in France, which had lasted Thirty-eight Years, being over, the remaining Events of this Reign consist only of the Quarrels between the Houses of Lancaster and York: The first of which had for Devise a Red, and the other a White Rose. These Devises are famous for the vast Torrents of English Blood spilt upon their Account. The Troubles raised by the Duke of York seemed to be entirely suppressed since his Reconciliation with the King: but they soon broke out afresh with so much the greater Fury, as the English were no longer taken up with a foreign War.

The Civil War is renewed in England.

I am

* Henry Bouchier Son of William, by Anne Daughter of Thomas of Woodstock (sixth Son of Edward III.) was not created Earl of Essex till June 30th, 1 Ed. 4. He was made Viscount in 2; Hen. 6. Dug.

1453.

I am going to give as brief an Account as possible of the Occurrences which happened on the Score of the Duke of York's Claim, and which ended at length in the Ruin of the King and the whole House of Lancaster.

The Rights of the House of York and Lancaster.

The Duke of York had renewed his Oath to the King : but he had done it only to get out of the Danger which he had plunged himself into by his Imprudence. He was no less bent upon asserting his Title, and taking the Advantage of the King's Incapacity, and the Peoples Disaffection for the Queen and her Ministers. To consider only the Laws and Customs of the Realm, his Title was indisputable. He was descended from the Second * Son of Edward III. whereas Henry was sprung only from the Third * Son of the same Prince. It is true indeed, it was by the Female-Line. But there was no such Thing in England as the Sallick-Law, which should exclude him upon that Account. On the contrary, in the Reign of Richard II. Roger Earl of Marab, his Grandfather by the Mother's Side, was declared by the Parliament Presumptive-Heir of the Crown, in case Richard died without Issue. And ever since the House of Lancaster was in Possession of the Throne, the Parliament had confirmed by a solemn Act the Right of the Females and their Descendents, as we have seen in the Reign of Henry IV. And yet Henry VI. was no Usurper. It was now above fifty Years since the House of Lancaster had held the Crown by the Authority of the Parliament, who settled it upon the Family of Henry IV. So that the Duke of York could not pretend to the Crown, but on Supposition that the Parliament had not Power to alter the Succession. For this Reason he could not openly discover his Intention, without striking directly at the Privileges of the Parliament, which the English Nation has all along been watchful of. Besides, he stood in need of the Parliament to bring about his Designs. But how could he gain the Parliament to his Side, if he offered to question the Falsity of their Acts? On the other Hand, there was a necessity of doing no less than

Difficulties of the Duke of York's Attempt.

* Lionel Duke of Clarence Third Son.

* John Duke of Lancaster Fourth Son.

than destroying a Fifty-Years Possession, confirmed by the unanimous Consent of the People, and become still more authentick by the glorious Advantages which the late King Henry V had procured for the Nation.

These Obstacles were sufficient to divert the Duke of York from his Enterprize, if on the other Side the present Circumstances had not given him Encouragement to pursue it. Henry was a Prince unable of himself to oppose the Attempts which the Duke could make against him. He was not hated by the People; but then he was but little esteemed. He was looked upon only as the Shadow of a King, who did little else but lend his Name to the Queen and Ministers. Nevertheless the sole Name of King would have been enough to keep the People in Subjection to those that were at the Helm, had they not made an ill use of their Power, as is too commonly done by them who are in the like Station. But the Authority usurped by the Queen and the Duke of Somerset, was not the only Cause of the Discontent of the English. When they considered that all the Conquests of Henry V, and Guienne it felt, which had been for three Hundred Years under the Dominion of England, were lost in a few Years, they could not forbear casting the Blame upon those that governed in the King's Name. Normandy had been taken from England in two Campaigns only, in the Regency of the Duke of Somerset, whilst he was actually on the Spot to defend it. He was accused likewise of having been too hasty in surrendering Caen. On the other Hand, it was considered that during the Regency of the Duke of Gloucester the Affairs of France were kept upon a pretty good Foot, and that nevertheless the Queen to gratify her Passion had dispatched that Prince out of the Way in a base and violent Manner, and thereby had been the Occasion of all the Losses which had happened since. So that People looked upon the King as a Prince incapable of retrieving the Honour of the Nation, and restoring the Affairs of the Kingdom to a flourishing State; upon the Queen as a Person too well affected to France, and as having no other Aim but to engross the whole Authority in England, and upon the Duke of So- 1453.

Somerſet as a greedy Minifter, who ſought only to enrich himſelf at the Expence of the Publick. They loudly complained alſo, that in order to preſerve his Authority, the Duke filled the higheſt Poſts with his Creatures, without any Regard to their Merits and Parts. This laſt Article made a deep Impreſſion in the Minds of the People. They could not behold without Indignation, the Council-Board filled with ill Men, and all the Places of the Kingdom held by Perſons of no Principles. This gave room to ſuſpect that the Queen's and Ministry's Aim was to hinder that Religion, Honour, Virtue, Love of one's Country, ſhould move thoſe that were in the Publick Poſts to make a ſtand againſt the Abuses and Diſorders which had as it were overflowed the Kingdom. This Temper of the People gave the Duke of York ſuch great Advantages, that he thought he ſhould lay hold of them, not by acting directly for himſelf, but under Colour of procuring the Good of the People, by obliging the King to make uſe of other Minifters. He knew very well that if he could once turn his Enemies out of the Council, and get in his Creatures, it would be no hard Matter to carry on farther the Execution of his Deſigns.

The Earl of Salisbury and Warwick chief Friends of the Duke of York.

An Undertaking of this Nature could not be brought about without the Aſſiſtance of ſome Friends, and therefore he engaged ſeveral Lords in his Plot, ſome under Colour of driving from Court the Duke of Somerſet, who was generally hated and envied, others by diſcovering to them the moſt ſecret Purpoſes. Among theſe laſt, the two Nevilles, Father and Son, were the Principal. The Father, who bore the Title of Earl of Salisbury, was eminent for his Virtues and conſummate Prudence. The Earl of Warwick his Son was univerſally eſteemed for his Valour, and adored by the People for his obliging Carriage. He knew how to behave in ſuch a Manner that he ſeemed to have ſolely in View the Welfare and Glory of the Nation *. Hitherto he had ſtudied to keep between the two Parties a neutrality, which by gaining him the Good-Will of the People,

* This is he that was commonly called, The Stout Earl of Warwick.

ple, had taken from the Ministers not only all Pretence of ruining him, but even all Occasion of suspecting him. These two Lords with some others, having consulted with the Duke of York about the Means to accomplish his Project, agreed that it was not yet a proper Season to discover his Intention; that on the contrary, he should carry himself very submissively with the King, in order to efface the ill Impressions his former Behaviour might have made in the People. The Frankness wherewith he had disbanded his Troops, and his new Oath to the King were exceeding proper to remove all Suspicion of his having any ill Design.

1453.

The Duke of York consults with his Friends.

The Parliament had been summoned to Reading. But by Reason the King had relapsed, it was adjourned to Westminster till February the 14th. In the Interim, some of the Duke of York's private Friends, who pretended to be of the Court Party, intimated to the Queen and Duke of Somerset, that in the present Temper of the People, it was to be feared the Parliament would come to Resolves disagreeable to them: That whilst the King was in good Health, they could act in his Name, because it was supposed that all Orders issued from him; but that the Case was not the same during his Sickness: That their Authority being wholly grounded upon the King's Will and Pleasure, there was Reason to fear that the Royal Will no longer appearing, the Parliament would nominate other Governours: That therefore it was proper to take into the Council the Duke of York, the two Nevils, and some other of the most popular Lords, that it might appear, that those who were at the Helm did not seek to engross all the Power. This Advice was built upon such plausible Reasons, that the Queen and Favourite could not help falling into the Snare laid for them. Wherefore the Duke of York, the two Nevils, and some others of their Cabal were called to the Council before the Parliament met. They were no sooner admitted, but they carried all before them; insomuch that they who rul'd every Thing before, had no longer any Credit.

Advice given the Queen and Duke of Somerset for their Ruin.

1453.
The Duke of Somerset sent to the Tower.

1454.
The Duke of York is made Protector,

The first notable Step of these Counsellors was to apprehend the Duke of Somerset in the Queen's own Room, and send him to the Tower. Mean while the Parliament was farther prorogued to the 15th of March, that the Duke of York and his Friends might have Time to concert Measures with the Members. Two Days before the Parliament sat, the Council empowered the Duke of York to hold it in the King's Name. In the Beginning of the Session the Commons sent to the House of Lords an Impeachment against the Duke of Somerset, for having suffered Normandy to be lost during his Regency, and by his Fault. April the 2d, the Great Seal was given to the Earl of Salisbury. Next Day the Parliament appointed the Duke of York Protector of the Realm, Defender of the Church, and first Counsellor of the King, with this Restriction, till the young Prince Edward the King's Son should be of Age to exercise that High Office. Hence it appears, first, that it was believed the King's Indisposition would last as long as he liv'd, and that it affected his Understanding more than his Body. In the next Place, by reserving this Post for a Child of six Months old, who was to fill it when he came to Age, the Parliament showed that their Intent was to preserve entire the House of Lancaster, though they declared the Duke of York Protector. Generally upon these Occasions, there is too much or too little done, the which gives rise to Civil Wars. If the Parliament had openly declared against the House of Lancaster, it is very likely that at such a Juncture, the Lancastrians would have found but few Friends. On the other Hand, if instead of placing the Duke of York so near the Throne, Care had been taken to check his Ambition, which was but too manifest, doubtless he would have lost many of his Adherents, and perhaps the Civil War which laid the Kingdom waste, would have been avoided. But it is a very hard Matter for a Parliament at such Junctures to be able to act with Freedom, and to follow the Rules of Reason and Equity.

and Gover-neur of Calais.

The Duke of York having all the Power in his own Hands, removed the Duke of Somerset, who was still in the Tower, from the Government of Calais, and by the King's Letters Letters Patent placed himself in his Room. Every one imagined that the Impeachment against the imprisoned Duke would be carried on vigorously. But the Business was suffered to lye dormant all the rest of the Year, without any one's seeming to mind it. Apparently the Evidences they had against him appeared insufficient.

1454.

In the Beginning of the Year 1455, the King finding himself somewhat recovered of his long Illness, the Authority conferred on the Duke of York ceased of Course, since it was grounded purely on the King's Inability by Reason of his Indisposition to govern the Realm himself. The Duke of York's Matters were not ripe enough to enable him to dispute with the King the Right of resuming his Authority, though it was in effect but to put it again in the Hands of the Queen. The first Effect of this Change, was the Enlargement of the Duke of Somerset. On the 5th of February the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Wiltshire*, and two Knights, having offered to be bound for him, their Offer was accepted, and the King ordered the Governour of the Tower to release the Prisoner. A Month after, these Lords were discharged from their Bail, without any Trial intervening. As the Duke had been apprehended by Order of Council, it was supposed he could be released by the same Authority. But there was a great deal to be said against this Supposition. The Impeachment of the House of Commons intervening since, it could not be maintained that the King had Power to set him at Liberty before he was legally acquitted. However the Court had no Regard to that Argument. Since the King had resumed the Government, the Duke of York and his Party had no longer any Credit in the Council where the Queen and the Duke of Somerset bore an absolute Sway. So prevalent was the King's bare Name in giving a new Turn to Affairs.

1455.
The King resumes his Authority.

The Duke of Somerset is released.
Act. Pub.
XI. 360.

Mean

* James Boteler or Butler, Son of James the fourth Duke of Ormond in Ireland, was created Earl of Wiltshire 27 Hen. 6. and was now also by his Father's Death Duke of Ormond. Dugdale.

1455.
The Duke of York and Somerset put Things to Arbitration.
 Act. Pub. XI. 263.

Mean while some of the most prudent Lords dreading the ill Consequences of the Quarrel between the two Duke's; used their Endeavour to make them Friends. It was the Interest of both to show that they acted not from ambitious Motives; for their Aim was to gain the People's Affection. Wherefore they both consented to put Matters to Arbitration, and to stand to the Decision of the Umpires, under Penalty for him that refused of paying to the other Twenty Thousand Marks. But it was on Condition that the Sentence of the Arbitrators should be pronounced before the 20th of June.

The Duke of York removed from the Government of Calais.
 March.

Whilst People were in Expectation of the Sentence, the Duke of Somerſet represented to the King, that he had been removed from the Government of Calais upon a bare Impeachment which had never been determined, and that it was not just that his Adversary should continue clothed with his Spoils, since their Quarrel was not yet decided. Upon this Remonstrance, the King took from the Duke of York the Government he had conferred on him for seven Years. Then under Colour of being willing to stand Neuter between the two contending Parties, he declared himself Governour of Calais. In the Act whereby the Duke of York was removed, it was said, that the King had done it at the Duke's own Request. But the Duke taking this as a heinous Affront, withdrew from Court, where he found his Affairs began to be in a very ill Way.

He retires into Wales, and raises an Army.

He retired into Wales, not so much to screen himself from the Attempts of his Enemies, as with Design to levy an Army, and have it in his Power to attack them. He was very sensible that the Queen and Duke of Somerſet being absolute Masters of the King's Person, had an Advantage of him which could not be taken from them but by Force. And therefore without further Consideration he resolved to take up Arms. The Court's Proceedings in releasing the Duke of Somerſet out of the Tower, without giving the Nation any Satisfaction in that Respect, made him imagine he should be strongly supported, when he came to use that Pretence. He was not deceived in his Expectations. In a short Space he saw himself at the Head of a nu-

1455.

a numerous Army, and in Condition to make Head against the King, who was likewise prepared on his Part, and was marching directly towards him in order to give him Battle.

The two Armies met near St. Albans on a level Ground, where nothing hindered them from engaging. The Duke of York willing to show that he had not taken up Arms but purely for the Good of the Publick, sent and offered the King to dismiss his Troops, if the Duke of Somerset was delivered to Justice, in order to be condemned if Guilty, or acquitted if Innocent. But the Court well knowing that this was only a vain Pretence, and that one Time or other, there would be a Necessity of deciding the Quarrel by Arms, rejected his Offer, and the Battle was fought on the 31st of May.

The Earl of Warwick, who commanded the Duke of York's Vanguard, having expected this Answer, attacked the King's Army, whilst the Court was waiting for new Proposals from the Male-Contents. This Attack, which was as vigorous as sudden, put the Royal Army in such Disorder, that it was not in the Duke of Somerset's Power to repair it. At the same Time the Duke of York improving this Advantage, advanced likewise from his Quarter, that the Enemies might not have Time to come to themselves. He pressed them so briskly, that the Royal Army was defeated in a few Moments, with the Loss of five Thousand Men, without having made any considerable Resistance. The Duke of Somerset was killed on the Spot, with the Earl of *Northumberland, the Earl of Stafford eldest Son of the Duke of Buckingham, the Lord Clifford, and several other Lords and Officers of Note*, all fast Friends of the House of Lancaster. The Duke of Buckingham having received a Wound, retired out of the Battle, the which put the finishing Stroke to the Defeat of the King's Troops.

The first Battle of St. Albans;

*The King's Army is defeated, and
the Duke of Somerset slain.*

Mean

* Henry Percy Son of Harpur, by the eldest Daughter of Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, he left Issue nine Sons (of whom Henry then 33 Years of Age, succeeded him,) and two Daughters.

* Of whom Forty-eight were buried in St. Albans.

1555.
The King falls into the Hands of the Duke of York, who treats him with respect.

Mean time the King, who was wounded in the Neck with an Arrow, seeing himself deserted in the Rout of his Army, retired to a little House which was presently invested. The Duke of York having notice of it, ran thither with speed in Company with the Earl of Salisbury, and presenting themselves before him on their Knees, told him, that since the common Enemy was dead, he beheld none there but such as were ready to obey him in whatever he should be pleased to command them. The King upon these Words recovering a little out of the Fright the Duke's Approach had put him into, intreated him, for God's sake, to put an end to the Slaughter, assuring him for his Part he was ready to give him all the Satisfaction he could reasonably desire. Whereupon the Duke ordered a Retreat to be sounded, and the Army to be forbid to shed any more Blood. Then he conducted the King to St. Albans, from whence they sat out together for London.

The Parliament meets,

and condemns the Queen's and Somer- set's Management, and justifies the Duke of York.

The King is petitioned to Name a Protector.

Shortly after, Henry called a Parliament which met in the Month of July. The King being then relapsed, the Duke of York was commissioned to hold it in his Name. The Parliament, which at such a Juncture could scarce be made up of any but the Adherents of the Duke of York, forthwith made the following Declaration: That the Government had been ill-managed by the Queen and Duke of Somerfet, who had abused the King's Goodness and Confidence: That the late Duke of Gloucester had been unjustly accused: That all the Alienations of the Crown-lands made since the first Year of the present Reign, should be revoked: That the Duke of York, the Earls of Salisbury or Warwick, or any that had lifted under their Banners, could not be blamed for taking up Arms against the King, seeing it was necessary in order to free his Person from Captivity: That on the contrary, the Blame was to be laid on the Duke of Somerfet and his Adherents, for having conceal'd from the King the Duke of York's Letter, which might have prevented the Troubles raised in the Kingdom. Then the Parliament petitioned the King to nominate a Protector by reason of his Indisposition, which hindered him from attending to the Affairs of the Publick. This Petition was repeated repeated several times, and the King returned an Answer to it. Not that he had resolved to reject it. He was no more at Liberty to follow his own Councils, than when he was under the Guardianship of the Queen and Duke of Somerset. But the Duke of York had a mind that his Nomination should not appear constrained. At length, the Parliament having been prorogued to the 12th of November, the very Day both Houses met again, the King signed a Patent, wherein he said, that having been frequently petitioned by his Parliament to nominate a Protector, he made choice of the Duke of York for that important Employ, till he should be removed by the Parliament, or the young Prince of Wales should be fit for it. Then, after a Month's Session, the Parliament was prorogued to the 14th of January.

The Parliament is prorogued. The King makes the Duke of York Protector.
Act. Pub. XI. 396.
P. 370.

Whilst the Duke of York thus enjoyed the Advantage he had gained upon his Enemies, they for their Part was not idle. The Queen, who knew very well what he was driving at, was too much concerned in the Case, as well upon her own as the King's Account, not to try to disappoint his Designs. Henry Duke of Somerset *, Son of him slain at St. Albans, and the Duke of Buckingham, were equally desirous to revenge, the one his Son's, the other his Father's Death. In fine, all the Princes and Lords allied to the House of Lancaster, or attached to the Lancastrian Interest, beholding the Duke of York taking large Steps towards the Throne, were prepared to use their utmost Endeavour to stop his Progress. Mean while, the Duke of York lived in a Security and Unconcernedness which astonished his very Enemies. He perceived it would be too hazardous openly to claim a Crown which had been Fifty-six Years in the House of Lancaster. Wherefore he chose to wait till Time should bring along with it some favourable Opportunity to assert his Right. Above all Things, he wanted to gain the Peoples Affections, without which he was satisfied all his Endeavours would be to no Purpose. So that to let the World see that he was not swayed by Passion or Interest, he left the King and Queen at full Liberty. He imagined that 1456.

Project against the Duke of York.

His Unconcernedness prejudicial to his Affairs.

* He bore the Title of Earl of March in his Father's Life-time.

1456. it was not in their Power to deprive him of the Protectorship, which according to his Patent he was to enjoy till the Parliament removed him. But he had to deal with an able and enterprising Princess, who was not discouraged at the Rubs she met in her way.

The King
recovers.

The King having recovered his Health, the Duke of York's Enemies resolved to lay hold of this Juncture to divest him of his Dignity of Protector, which gave him so great a Sway. It would have been easy for him to foresee that the King's Recovery might be made a handle, as it was once before, if the Clause in his Patent had not blinded his Eyes. But this Clause whereon he relied was a weak Fence against the Attempts of his Enemies. The Parliament being met again, the King went thither in Person, and declared, that being by God's Grace in good Health, and in condition to hold the Reins of the Government, he did not think the Kingdom had any longer need of a Protector. Then he desired the Parliament to consent that the Duke of York might be dismissed from that Office. Whether the Parliament thought the King's Demand reasonable, or whether the Members had been won unknown to the Duke, they immediately came to a Resolution to grant the King's Request. The same Day the King sent the Duke an Order to act no longer as Protector.

The Duke of York is dismissed from the Protectorship.
February.

Act. Pub.
XI. 373.

He withdraws from Court.

The Duke of York and his Party were like Men Thunderstruck at this Proceeding. They easily perceived that the Combination was too strong for them to hope to be able to break it. Wherefore, making as they say a Virtue of Necessity, they feigned to submit with a good Grace to the King's and Parliament's Orders. However, under Colour of having nothing more to do at Court, they retired into the Country. But the Duke of York, and Earls of Salisbury and Warwick kept pretty near together in Yorkshire.

Sedition at London.

Shortly after there was a Sedition at London, occasioned by a sudden Quarrel between two Merchants, an Englishman and an Italian. The Mob having rise in favour of the Englishman, the King impowered the Dukes of Exeter and Buckingham to bring the Guilty to a Tryal: but the Populace would not suffer them to execute their Commission.

The

The Queen suspecting that this Tumult had been raised by the Duke of York's Adherents, and not thinking the King safe at London, carried him to Coventry, under colour of change of Air. But besides this, she had another Motive of no less Importance: And that was, to intrap at once the Duke of York and the two Earls his Friends, who were all three retired into the North. She was informed, that notwithstanding they were separated in appearance, they had frequently, on divers Pretences, Conferences together, at which several other Lords of their Party were present. As she could not question but it was in order to concert Measures against the King, she believed she should carry her Point, if she could draw them to Coventry, where they would not find the same Protection as at London. With this view she sent them Letters under the King's own Hand, requiring their Presence at Court, where he wanted their Advice in an Affair of the utmost Consequence.

1456.
The Queen takes the King into Warwickshire.

She tries to draw the three Lords to Court.

They are like to be intrapped.

The Duke of York had not yet done any thing openly, which showed that he aspired to the Crown. This was a Secret between him and his principal Friends. It is true indeed, the Court was satisfied of it, but it was not possible to prove it upon him. Hitherto he had varnished his Actions with the Good of the Publick. And for that very reason he was formidable to the Court. But though it was no easy thing to convict him legally, he could not be ignorant that there were speedier and more certain Ways of getting rid of him, and that his Enemies were not over-scrupulous. Besides, though he had been able to hide his Designs from the People, he could not imagine that he had blinded the Eyes of the Queen, who was too much concerned in the Case not to see through his Disguise. Notwithstanding these Considerations, which should have put upon their guard the three Lords who had received the King's Letters, they resolved to go to him. They flattered themselves that Henry being at length sensible of the Mismanagement of the Queen and Ministry, required their Assistance in making some Alterations at Court: But whilst they were upon the Road to Coventry, their private Emissaries undeceived them, and let them know they would not

But upon Notice of the Queen's Designs they retire.

1456. be safe there. This Advice having made them take other Measures they thought best to part. The Duke of York withdrew to his Castle of Wigmore, in the Marches of Wales; and the Earl of Salisbury to his Seat [at Middleham *] in Yorkshire; as for the Earl of Warwick, he went directly to Calais, of which he had been made Governor, after the Battle of St. Albans. The Queen was extremely vexed at having missed her Aim. But her Comfort was however, that she had separated the three Lords, and by that means rendered them less formidable.

1457. The Fears and Jealousies of both Parties were in some measure laid asleep during the Year 1457 by foreign Affairs. The French invade the Coasts of England; As the English had formerly taken the Advantage of the Dissensions which tore France in pieces, in order to make Conquests upon that Kingdom, Charles VII. thought that he ought not to neglect the Opportunity which the Quarrels at the Court of England seemed to offer him. To that Purpose he got ready two Fleets which were to invade England in two different Quarters. The first sailing to the Downs, plundered the Town of Sandwich. The other served [Foy] a little Town in Cornwall in the same manner. But this was all they did worth notice. Apparently they were but ill provided to venture upon more important Attempts. So that it was properly but a kind of Bravado to insult the English in their own Country; after having driven them out of France.

The Scots the Northern Parts. Act. Pub. XI. 327. About the same time the Scots made likewise an Inroad into the Northern Counties, from whence they carried off some Booty. The Truth is, there was a Truce concluded in 1453 between England and Scotland, till the 21st of May this Year, on Condition that upon the Time being expired, he of the two Kings that had a mind to renew the War should give the other notice of it One Hundred and Eighty

* This Lordship came to the Nevills by Mary, Daughter and Coheir to Ralph Fitz-Randolph, Lord of Middleham, who was married to Robert de Nevil, one of the Ancestors of the Earl of Salisbury. This Robert de Nevil frequenting the Company of a certain Lady in Craven in an adulterous Manner, was surprized by the Lady's Husband, who in revenge cut off his Genitals, which threw him into such excessive Grief th. died June 6. 1721. 55 Hen. 3. Dug.

Eighty Days before-hand. But so many Attempts had been made on both Sides, that neither Party thought themselves obliged to keep the Treaty. The very last Year, the two Kings had writ one another affrontive Letters, full of Haughtiness and Contempt. However, whether the Scots had only acted with design to revenge some particular Injury, or for some other Reason, the Truce was renewed from the 1st of July this Year to that day Twelve-Month, 1459, and afterwards prolonged to the 16th of July 1463.

1457.
P. 383.
Truce renewed with Scotland, 389, 407.

Matters being adjusted with the foreign Enemies, domesticks Feuds were just going to break out again, if some peaceful Tempers had not used their Endeavours to prevent the fatal Consequences of these Divisions. It was easy to see that the two Parties, in deciding their Quarrel by Arms, could not but ruin the Kingdom, and occasion in the End some sad Revolution. Neither Party had so much the odds as to be able to hope for certain Victory. Success depended on the Issue of the War, too doubtful an Issue for either of the Parties to ground any reasonable Prospect upon. The Duke of York was very sensible that it was no easy Matter to dispossess by Force a King that had sat on the Throne Thirty-five Years. The Truth is, though Henry was little esteemed by his Subjects by reason of his Incapacity, yet he gained their Affections by the Innocency of his Life, and the Uprightness of his Intentions, though ill-supported by his slender Abilities. On the other Hand, the Queen, the new Duke of Somerset, who held the late Duke his Father's Post, the rest of the Ministry, and the whole House of Lancaster, were in a very tottering Condition. The French and Scots took advantage from these Quarrels to invade the Kingdom, and all Miscarriages were laid to their Door who governed in the King's Name. The Court saw plainly that the Duke of York made use of this Handle to stir up the People against them. Though hitherto he had not made so great Progress as he could have wished, he saw himself however in Condition to make a much greater very quickly. These Reasons added to the King's Instances that Means might be sought to make up the Quarrels, moved the Queen and the Duke of Somerset at length to send 1458.

The two Parties are outwardly reconciled.

1458. send the Duke of York an Offer of a sincere Reconciliation: This first Step being taken, the King desired the Duke of York and his Friends to repair to London, a Place which by them could not be suspected, in order to bring about an Accommodation. He writ them a Letter with his own Hand, wherein he promised them upon his Salvation that he would do them no Injury, and that his Intention was sincere and undissembled.

Such an Invitation could not be rejected, without an open Declaration of his Designs, which the Duke of York was willing to avoid. Wherefore the Lords of his Party resolved to accept it. They were jealous however of the Queen, who on her Part had as little Confidence in them. It may be, they were both equally in the Right. It is very likely, that each Party hoped to reap some Benefit from this Meeting, without intending however to alter their first Schemes. Mean while, to remove all Fears, it was agreed that both Parties might come attended with a certain Number of armed Followers. The King even gave the Earl of Warwick leave, who was to come from Calais, to bring along with him Four-score Foreigners besides the English *.

Every thing being thus settled, the Lords of both Parties came to London in the Month of January: but the Earl of Warwick arrived not till February. They were lodged in two different Quarters, to avoid the Disorders which their being together might occasion. The Mayor of London * rode every Night round the City with his Train-Bands to the Number of Ten Thousand. The King and Queen entered the City the 27th of March, and took up their Lodging in the Bishop's Palace, at an equal Distance from both Parties.

Mediators being chosen with unanimous Consent, such was the Temper of both Sides, that on the 3d of April a Recon-

* He brought with him 600 Men in Red-coats, imbroidered with Ragged-Staves before and behind. The Earl of Salisbury brought 500; the Duke of York 400. The Dukes of Somerset and Exeter 800. The Earl of Northumberland, the Lords Egremont and Clifford 1500.

* Sir Godfrey Bullen, Ancestor of two famous Queens, Ann, second Wife of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth their Daughter.

Reconciliation was made to the common Satisfaction of the King, the Queen, the Parties concerned, and the whole Kingdom. The Substance of the Agreement was that, all Animosity a-part, the Lords should live together in Peace and Concord, and in perfect Obedience to the King's Commands. But to cut off all occasion of Complaint, it was agreed that the Duke of York, the Earls of Salisbury and Warwick, with some others of that Party, should be admitted into the Council. Then the 5th of April was appointed for a Publick Thanksgiving Day on account of this Reconciliation, wherein a solemn Procession was made in St. Paul's Church. The King and Queen and all the Lords were present, and walked two and two, one of each Party, in token of present Union*. The Duke of York led the Queen by the Hand, who in going made show of favourable Countenance towards him.

The Duke of York and his Friends re-admitted into the Council. Solemn Procession.

It appeared however soon after, that notwithstanding all this outward Show and Parade, Friendship was far from being really established between the two Parties. The Duke of York and his two principal Friends always fearing some Treachery from their reconciled Enemies, withdrew from Court on divers Pretences. The Duke and Earl of Salisbury went to York, and the Earl of Warwick to his Government of Calais. The English Historians say, that this Earl being Admiral of the Channel, equipped fourteen Ships to go and give Chace to some Spanish Corsairs who infested the narrow Seas, and having met them, sunk several, and brought in six to Calais. But it is probable they were mistaken, since the Collection of the Publick Acts give quite another Notion of this Affair. It is true, we find there that the Republicks of Genoa and Lubeck complained to the King on this Occasion against the Earl of Warwick, and that the King appointed Commissioners to enquire into the Matter. But in their Commission there is no mention of Spanish Ships. It even appears that this Engagement happened

The Duke of York and his Friends retire from Court.

The Earl of Warwick seizes upon some foreign Ships.

Act. Pub. XI. 415.

* Before the King went Hand in Hand the Duke of Somerset and Earl of Salisbury; the Duke of Exeter and Earl of Warwick: And behind the King came the Queen and Duke of York.

1451.
He comes to England to justify what he had done.

Quarrel between him and the King's Servants.

He is attacked, and hardly escapes.

He is ordered to be seized.

He takes Measures with his Father and the Duke of York.

pened purely by Means of an accidental Quarrel between the Ships of Genoa and Lubeck, and those which were carrying the Earl of Warwick with his Retinue to Calais. This does not show that they were Pyrates, or that the Earl of Warwick attacked them designedly. Be this as it will, upon their Complaint he was forced to return to Eng-land to answer for himself, where he staid six or seven Weeks.

Whilst the Earl was at London it happened one Day, that whilst he was present at the Council Board, one of his People picked a Quarrel with a Servant of the King's, and wounded him. Whereupon the rest of the King's Ser- vants snatching up what lay next to Hand, one a Sword, another a Club, or some other kind of Arms, ran to re- venge their Comrade. As they could not light on him that had been the Aggressor, they fell upon the rest of the Earl of Warwick's Train. In fine, they even assaulted his Person as he was coming out of the Council to go to his Barge which waited for him on the Thames. They fell foul on him in such a manner, that he very hardly escaped, after having seen several of his Followers killed on the Spot. He made no question but this was a Contrivance of the Queen's to dispatch him, without appearing to have any Hand in the Matter. He was confirmed in his Opinion, when he heard the King had ordered him to be apprehend- ed and sent to the Tower. He had notice of this timely enough to disappoint those who were sent to arrest him. It is a pretty hard Matter to decide, whether the Queen contrived this Quarrel on Purpose to get rid of him, or whether it happened by Accident. However that be, the Order given to apprehend him, though he himself had Reason to complain, made him sensible that he should never be safer from the Plots of his Enemies, than when he attacked them with open Force. With a Mind full of Resentment at the Affront he had received, he went to the Earl of Salisbury his Father, and without Delay, they both repaired together to the Duke of York, to consult what was to be done upon this Occasion. From what had lately happened they concluded that the Reconciliation made at London was only only a Snare to entrap them the more easily and destroy them one after another. Perhaps they were not sorry for having this Handle to justify the Resolution they took of acting openly, as not being able to rely any more on the Promises of the Court. Pursuant to this Project, the Earl of Warwick speedily returned to Calais to make sure of that Place, not questioning but they had a Design to take it from him. 1458. He returns to Calais.

Mean while the Duke of York and the Earl of Salisbury took Measures to bring about their Designs. They agreed, that whilst the Duke should levy an Army in Wales, the Earl should advance towards London at the Head of five or six Thousand Men, and openly demand Satisfaction for the Injury done to his Son. As this could not be executed without the Queen's knowing it, she ordered the Lord *Audley to be commissioned to raise Troops and go against the Earl of Salisbury. Audley made such dispatch, that in a very short Time he saw himself at the Head of ten Thousand Men, and in Condition to march towards Lancashire, through which County the Earl of Salisbury was to pass. But he found the Earl was already advanced as far as Shropshire, where the two Armies met. The Earl of Salisbury, though but half as strong as the Enemy, did not think proper to retreat, but resolved to make use of a Stratagem to obtain a Victory, which otherwise he could have no great Prospect of. Audley being encamped on Bore-Heath, close by a little River, Salisbury went and posted himself on the other Side, as if he meant to guard the Pass and hinder his being attacked. Then on a sudden, feigning fear, he retired in the Night, ordering his March so that at break of Day his Enemies could still see the Rear of his Army. This Retreat, which seemed to be made in haste, having inspired the Royalists with Eagerness, they began to pass the River in Disorder, imagining they had no- 1459. The Earl of Salisbury marches towards London with an Army.

The Lord Audley is sent against him.

The Battle of Bore-Heath. Audley is slain.

* James Tucket Grandson of John Tucket by Joan Sister and Heir of Nicholas Aldithly or Audley of Holeigh, who died without Issue-Male. Wherefore the Posterity of the said Joan and John had the Title of Lord Audley.

1459. thing to do but to pursue the flying Enemy. But whilst they were in this Confusion, some already over the River, others in the Water, and others ready to Pass, the Earl of Salisbury wheeled about and fell upon the Troops already come over, who had scarce Time to draw up. The Fight lasted however four or five Hours, because the King's Troops were backed by those that were passing the River continually. But as this could not be done without Confusion, the Royal Army was at length put to Rout with Loss of two Thousand four Hundred Men. Audley himself was slain, with all the principal Officers *.

Salisbury joins York. The Count raises an Army.

The Duke of York prepares also.

The Earl of Warwick joins the Duke of York.

The King marches towards the Male-contents.

The Earl of Salisbury having thus opened his Way, went and joined the Duke of York, who was raising Troops in Wales. It would have been too hazardous for him to continue his March towards London, because the Court had already drawn together a great many Forces at Coventry. The Queen, who commanded always in the King's Name, used all possible Endeavours to have a strong Army. She saw plainly that there was nothing to be done at this Pinch without having vastly the Odds on her Side. On the other Hand, the Duke of York and Earl of Salisbury were no less intent upon procuring all the Assistance possible, in order to be able to withstand the Forces that were preparing against them. They sent Word to the Earl of Warwick, that it was very necessary he should come and join them, and try to bring some Troops along with him. Upon receiving this Advice, Warwick left Calais under the Government of William Nevill Lord Falconbridge his Uncle, and took with him Part of the Garrison, of which he gave the Command to Sir Andrew Trollop, who had signalized himself in the Wars of France.

It was seven Months after the Battle of Bore-Hearth before the two Parties had drawn all their Forces together. October was come and no Motion had been made on either Side. At length the King set out for Coventry, where he had had assembled his Troops, and marched towards Wales in quest of the Male-contents who were encamped about Ludlow. When he came to Gloucester, he made a Halt, and sent an Offer of Pardon to the Rebels, on Condition they would lay down their Arms. They returned in Answer, that they could no longer rely on such Promises which were intended only for Snares to entrap them, as was visible from what had happened at London to the Earl of Warwick; that nevertheless they were ready to submit to the King, if he could find some Expedient for their Safety. Upon this Answer the King ordered his Army to move forwards. At the same Time he gave the Duke of Somer/et a Patent to be Governour of Calais in the Room of the Earl of Warwick. But it was easier to give the Duke a Grant of this Government in Parchment than to put him in Possession.

* The Cheshire Men were the greatest Sufferers, who wore that Day little Silver Swans, the Prince of Wale's Badge, which the Queen had ordered to be distributed to all the Gentlemen of that County. This Battle was fought about a Mile from Draiton in Shropshire.

1459.

He offers them a Pardon. They demand Security.

The King makes Somerset Governour of Calais.

The King having advanced with Design to give Battle, the Yorkists sent him a very submissive Letter, praying him to consider that they had taken up Arms purely in their own Defense against the Attempts of their Enemies; That it was plain they intended no more, by their keeping in a Corner of the Kingdom, without undertaking any Thing, being determined not to fight but upon Compulsion; That they desired only the Redress of the Grievances introduced into the Government to the great Oppression of the People, by the Fault of the Ministry. Lastly, they besought the King to look upon them as Loyal Subjects who had no Designs upon his Person, and to restore them to Favour.

Letter of the Male-contents to the King.

This Letter had a quite contrary Effect to what they expected. Their Enemies not questioning but Fear had made them talk in this humble manner, advanced within half a Mile of them, with a Resolution to give them Battle next Day. At the same Time they found Means to disperse in the Enemy's Camp the King's Proclamation, offering Pardon to all the Adherents of the rebellious Lords, provided they would lay down their Arms. This Proclamation had a wonderful Effect. The Duke of York's Troops imagining the King offered a Pardon, by Reason of the Superiority of his Forces, and that there was no

They are deterred by their Troops.

1459.

Time to spare to take the Benefit of it, immediately began to disperse themselves. Sir Andrew Trollop, who commanded the Detachment of the Garrison of Calais, put the whole Army in Disorder by going over in the Night to the King's Camp, with the Troops under his Command. This Desertion, which encreased every Moment, threw the Leader into so terrible a Consternation, that fearing to be delivered up to the King as soon as Day should appear, they chose to save themselves by Flight. The Duke of York taking with him the Earl of Rutland his second Son, went and embarked for Ireland. The Earl of Warwick fled towards Calais, and the Earl of Salisbury speedily followed him thither with the Earl of March eldest Son of the Duke of York. This young Prince was then about nineteen Years old. The Generals having thus shifted for themselves, the rest of the Officers and Soldiers saw themselves left to the King's Mercy, who was pleased to pardon all but a few that were executed for an Example.

The Duke of York flies into Ireland. Warwick and Salisbury to Calais.

The Duke of York and his Adherents are attainted.

The Parliament being assembled in December, declared the Duke of York and his Adherents guilty of High-Treason. Their Estates were confiscated, and both they and their Posterity, pronounced incapable of inheriting, till the fourth Generation. We behold in this a remarkable Instance of the variableness of the Parliament, according as the Scene of Affairs were shifted. I shall have frequent Occasion in the Sequel to take notice of the like Proceedings.

The Duke of Somerset is repulsed at Calais.

Upon the breaking up of the Parliament, the Duke of Somerset went and embarked with a Body of Troops, in order to take Possession of his Government of Calais; but the Garrison firing upon him, he was obliged to land elsewhere, and retire to Guisnes, from whence he made frequent Incursions about Calais. But those little Sallies were not capable of rendering him Master of so strong a Place.

1460.

The Queen sends him Supplies, which are carried off to Calais.

The Queen finding the Earl of Warwick would not be deprived of his Government, fitted out a Fleet to transport Succours to the Duke of Somerset. The Fleet well provided with all Things lay at Sandwich expecting a fair Wind to put to Sea. The Earl of Warwick having notice of

of it, ordered a Body of Troops to set out privately from Calais, under the Command of Sir John Dinham, who coming to Sandwich about break of Day, surprized most of the Officers in their Beds *. As soon as he had them in his Power, he found Means to win the Soldiers and Mariners, and carried off the King's Ships to Calais. 1459.

The Earl of Warwick made use of these Ships to convoy him to Ireland, where he went to concert with the Duke of York the Measures they were to take for their common Defense. After he had been gone about a Month, he met in his Return the Duke of Exeter Admiral of England, who waited to take him in his Passage. But the Royal Fleet showed so little Inclination to fight against him, that the Duke of Exeter fearing he should meet with some Disgrace, thought not proper to attack him. 1460. Warwick consults with York. The Duke of Exeter durst not attack him.

The Queen and the Ministry doubted not but the Interview of the Duke of York and the Earl of Warwick would produce a fresh Rebellion. This was the Reason that at a Council held upon that Account, it was resolved that strict Search should be made in all the Shires and Towns in England after the Adherents of the Duke of York, and that such should be dispatched out of the Way, as were the greatest Sticklers for him, and best able to do him Service. It was not questioned but this Method would put an effectual Stop to his ambitious Views. Pursuant to this Resolution, James Butler Earl of Wiltshire, and the Lord Scales were empowered to make strict Inquisition for those that had bore Arms on the Side of the Male-contents in the late Rebellion, and to punish them according to Law. These two Lords began to execute their Commission in some of the Towns *ⁱ which had declared the most openly for the Duke of York, and condemned several Persons to Death. Of all the Counties in the Kingdom, there was none that had more Reason to feel the Court's Resentment than that of Kent. Upon all Occasions that County had shown a very

The Court resolves to get rid of the Yorkists.

A Commission to that Purpose.

* Richard Woodvil Earl of Rivers the Admiral, and his Son Anthony were both taken Prisoners.

*ⁱ In Newbury, a Lordship belonging to the Duke of York. Dugdale.

1460.
Kent allarmed at it, and invites over the Lords at Calais.

They send Falcon-bridge before;

Woo sends back Word how the People stood affected.

The Lords publish a Manifesto.

very strong Attachment to the Duke of York, and the Business of Cade was not yet forgot. Wherefore the People of Kent perceiving by what was practised in other Places, that their Ruin was unavoidable, began betimes to think of the Means to prevent it. To that End they sent Word to the Lords at Calais, that if they would make a Descent in the County of Kent, they should be received with open Arms, and that the Inhabitants were ready to venture their Lives and Fortunes in their Cause.

This Overture was very agreeable to the Lords. However, not to embark inconsiderately in this Affair, they sent the Lord Falconbridge before to sound the People's Inclinations. Falconbridge meeting at Sea with Sir Simon Monfort, who was appointed to guard the Coasts, attacked him, and taking him Prisoner with a great many other Officers, sent them all to Calais. Upon their arrival, the Earl of March caused the Heads of a Dozen of them to be struck off, by way of Retaliation for the Adherents of the Duke his Father, who had him put to Death in England. These are Acts of Cruelty hardly to be avoided in Civil Wars.

Falconbridge being come to Sandwich, found the Inhabitants of that Place and of the whole County of Kent so well-affected to the Lords, that he wrote Calais that there was no Time to be lost; that the County of Kent was upon the Brink of Ruin, if not suddenly relieved; and that in the Fright People were under, there was no doubt but not only that County, but several others would take up Arms against the Court, if they could have any Prospect of being backed. This Juncture appearing so favourable, the Lords at Calais resolved to make the best of it, and took care to inform the Duke of York, who still kept in Ireland, how Matters stood. Before they set Sail, they dispersed in the County of Kent and the Country round a Manifesto, wherein they declared, that the sole Motive of their taking up Arms was to free the poor People from the Oppression they groaned under, and to maintain their Rights and Privileges. Adding, that they did not question in the least but all honest Englishmen would assist them in the Execution of so good a Design. This Manifesto had such an Effect, that that the Lords being arrived at Sandwich with fifteen Thousand Men only, found there a Body of four Thousand strong conducted by the Lord Cobham. With this Reinforcement they began their March towards London, well knowing the Citizens were ready to receive them. And indeed, the Gates being opened to them, they entered the City at the Head of Forty Thousand Men, their Army having increased to that Number in a March of so few Miles. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London, Lincoln, Ely, Exeter, declared for them.

1460.
They arrived at Sandwich.
Their Army is increased to 40000.
They are admitted into London.

Mean while the Queen, who was at Coventry, was not idle. She had endeavoured to hinder the Admittance of the Male-Contents into London, by dispatching thither the Lord Scales with a good Body of Troops. But the Mayor had shut the Gates against him, even before the Arrival of the Lords. The Lord Scales seeing himself thus repulsed, had thrown himself into the Tower, from whence he threatened to demolish the City with his Cannon, if the Rebels were admitted. But his Threats were not capable of frightening the Citizens. In the Interim, the King and Queen drew together their Forces at Coventry, with all possible Expedition. As soon as their Army was in a Readiness to march, they conferred the Command on the Duke of Somerset, lately returned from Guisnes, and the Duke of Buckingham. But this was only for Form's sake, the Queen herself being really General, since nothing was done but by her Orders, though the King was present in Person. The young Earl of March having notice that the Queen was marching towards London, went from thence with Five and Twenty Thousand Men, to try to give her Battle before she should have drawn any more Forces together. He left at London the Earl of Salisbury with a good Part of his Troops, and took with him the Earl of Warwick and the Lord Cobham, who served him as his Lieutenant-Generals. Upon his going from London, the Lord Scales ordered the Tower Cannon to play against the City, and did some damage. But by the Care which the Earl of Salisbury took to hinder any Provision from being brought him, he was himself reduced to very great Streights.

The Queen tries in vain to prevent them.

She assembles her Forces at Coventry, and marches towards London.

The Lords go to meet her.

The

1460.

The Queen passes a River to fight them.

The Queen having advanced towards the Male-Contents, incamped on a Plain hard by Northampton, with a little River behind her. She had made haste to pass the Rivulet, lest the Enemy should take the Advantage of it to avoid fighting. So eager was she to decide the Quarrel by a Battle. But this Precaution was so far from being of any Service to her, that it turned greatly to her Prejudice, as we shall see presently. The Earls of March and Warwick having likewise advanced, incamped on the 17th of July between Torcester and Northampton. The same Day they sent the Bishop of Salisbury to the King, beseeching him to suspend his Indignation, and seek with them the Means of an Accommodation, which would save the Effusion of English Blood. But the Court perceiving that this was only a general Proposal, intended purely for an outside Show, would by no means give Ear to it. Wherefore both Sides prepared for Battle.

The Court
rejects the Submission of the Lords.

The Battle of Northampton.

On the 19th of July the Army of the Yorkists advanced towards the King's. The Earl of Warwick commanded the Right Wing, the Lord Cobham the Left, and the Earl of March was in the Center. The Dukes of Somerset and Buckingham were at the Head of the Royalists, whilst the Queen kept at some Distance, to observe what should pass, and to give Orders accordingly. The King staid in the Camp in his Tent, watching the Issue of a Battle, which in all appearance was to secure him the Crown, or deprive him of it for ever. The Fight began not till two in the Afternoon, the Lords having first published through the Army, that great Care should be taken not to hurt the King's Person, to spare the common Soldiers, and to put none but the Officers to the Sword. They fought two Hours, some say five, with great Ardour and Obstinacy on both Sides, till at length the Lord Grey, [of Ruthin] who commanded a considerable Body of the King's Army, went over on a sudden to the Male-contents. This unexpected Desertion quite disheartened the Royalists. In the Apprehension they were under that other Bodies would do the like, they began by degrees to give ground, and at last were put to rout with loss of Ten Thousand Men. The River,

The Royal
Army is defeated, and
the King taken.

1460.

River, which was in their Rear, made the Slaughter greater than it would have been, if the Vanquished had been able to fly without any hindrance; besides that abundance were drowned in endeavouring to repass the River. The Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Shrewsbury, Son of the renowned Talbot, the Lord Beaumont *, and several other Lords and Officers of Distinction were slain on the Spot. The Queen, the young Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Somerset, rid away full speed, and scarce ever stopped till they came to Durham, so much were they afraid of being delivered to their Enemies. The unfortunate King, who continued in his Tent, fell once more into the Hands of the victorious Lords, who paid him however all the Respect which he could have expected from them, had he been in his greatest Prosperity. This Deference was some Comfort to him in the Condition he was in, who would have been more worthy of Pity, if his natural Imbecility had not rendered him as it were insensible of good and bad Fortune. Immediately after the Battle he was honourably conducted to Northampton, where he resided some Time. After that, on the 16th of August he came to London, surrounded with a Crowd of Lords, who a few Days before had fought against him. Mean while the Queen, not thinking her self safe at Durham, privately withdrew, attended by eight Persons only, into Wales, where it would never have come into her Enemies Heads to go in quest of her. Shortly after she left her Retreat to go with the Prince her Son and take Refuge in Scotland.

The Queen
flies to Durham.The King is treated with Respect,and conducted to London.The Queen retires into Wales.

Upon the King's Arrival at London he called a Parliament for the 2d of October. They who governed him wanted this Delay, in order to send for the Duke of York who was still in Ireland. They took care to acquaint him with what had passed, and desired him to repair to London with all possible speed, that he might be there at the opening of the Parliament, or sooner if the Wind would permit. In the Interim they acted in the King's Name, and got him to sign all the Orders which suited with their Interests. We find in the Collection of Publick Acts, a Patent which con-

A Parliament is called.* John de Beaumont, the first Viscount in England, created 18 Hen. 6 1460.

The King's Declaration in favour of the Duke of York.
Act. Pub.
XI. 460.

firmed to the Earl of Warwick the Government of Calais, and an Order to the Duke of Somerset to give him up that of Gwisnes. And likewise a Declaration of the King's, acknowledging the Duke of York and his Adherents for good and faithful Subjects, as having given undoubted Marks of their Loyalty, not only in Word but in Deed.

The King of Scotland
besieges Roxbo-rough.

Whilst England was thus in Combustion, James II King of Scotland, prepared to make an Irruption. It was the Duke of York that after his retiring into Ireland had engaged him to break with Henry, by some advantageous Offers, hoping to reap some Benefit himself from this Diversi- on. Though last Year James had concluded with England a Four Years Truce, he believed he ought not to let slip this Opportunity without improving it. Indeed he alledged several Reasons to give a Colour to the Invasion he was meditating, but the Circumstances England then was in, was the sole and real Motive of his Preparations. Be that as it will, a few Days after the Battle of Northampton, he entered England at the Head of an Army, and besieged Roxborough. But he had not Time to make any great Progress. One of his own Cannon happening to burst, he was killed with a Splinter on the 4th of August. James III his eldest Son, then but seven Years old, was his Successor. The Queen his Widow, who was in the Army, carried on the Siege till the Town was surrendered.

He is killed by the splitting of a Cannon.

Charles VII dies, and is succeeded by Lewis XI.

The Death of James II had been preceded some Days by that of Charles VII King of France. It is affirmed that he suffered himself to be starved for fear of being poisoned by the Dauphin his Son, who mounted the Throne of France after him, by the Name of Louis XI.

The Duke of York arrives, and goes to the Parliament
He expects in vain to be asked to seat himself on the Throne.

The Duke of York could not get to London till two Days after the opening of the Parliament. He rode directly to Westminster, and lighting from his Horse, went to the House of Lords, where he stood some Time under the Canopy of State, with his Hand on the Throne, as it were expecting they should ask him to seat himself thereon. But the Silence of the House made him plainly enough perceive that his Intention was not universally approved of. At the same Time, to encrease the Confusion their Silence had put him 1460. him into, the Archbishop of Canterbury approaching him, asked him whether he would not go and pay his Respects to the King. With what Caution soever the Duke had carried it hitherto, he could not forbear blushing at this Proposal, and telling the Archbishop he knew no Person to whom he owed that Honour. Upon these Words he immediately withdrew to his own House. He was too sharp-sighted not to see that he expected in vain that they should intreat him to accept of the Crown. And therefore without disguising his Sentiments any longer, he sent next Morning a Writing to the Parliament containing the Reasons on which his Pretensions were grounded. As they have been frequently mentioned, it will be needless to repeat them. It suffices to say in a Word, that he laid Claim to the Crown as Heir of the House of March. This Affair was very briskly debated in Parliament, according to the Knowledge and Inclination of the Members. One cannot without being very tedious, stay to relate all the Arguments which were brought Pro and Con. But as this is a Matter of great Moment, it will not be improper to give the Substance of what was objected against the Duke of York's Claim, and the Replies of his Friends thereto. I must not however forget to remark, that both Sides referred it to the Decision of the Parliament, which they equally acknowledged for the sole Judge of this Affair.

He sends the Parliament a Memorial to justify his Claim.

In the first Place it was said, that when Henry IV, Grandfather of the present King, took Possession of the Throne, no Body offered to oppose him.

Arguments Pro and Con.

The Duke of York's Friends replied, that as Edward Earl of March, who was then alive, could not dispute it with him without manifest Danger, his Silence could not be interpreted for Consent.

II. It was alledged on the King's behalf, that Henry IV his Grandfather had received the Crown by the Parliament's Authority. To this it was answered, that the Duke of York did not pretend to take Possession of it without the same Authority, as it appeared by his Memorial directed to both Houses. But that as the Parliament had then strong 1460.

Reasons to proceed contrary to Custom, in Favour of the House of Lancaster, so they had at present no less Motives to do the Duke of York the Justice due to him. They who talked in this manner, took care not to call the Parliament's Authority in Question, at a Time when they intended to make use of it to place the Duke of York on the Throne. But in all Appearance they did not speak upon this Subject all they thought.

III. The Resignation of Richard II was pleaded in behalf of the House of Lancaster.

Answer was made, by denying that Richard's Resignation concerned that House in Particular, or even the Person of Henry IV. But supposing it had, it was not in the Power of a King actually a Prisoner, and upon the Point of being deposed, to settle the Succession.

IV. It was objected against the Duke of York, that the Earl of Cambridge his Father having been executed for High-Treason, his Posterity by that were rendered incapable of any Inheritance.

The Duke's Adherents answered, that he had been restored to his Honours, and all his Rights, and acknowledged for Duke of York and Earl of March by the King himself, and the whole Kingdom.

V. It was further urged, that the House of Lancaster had enjoyed the Crown above sixty Years.

To this it was replied, that Prescription was no Plea against the Right of succeeding to the Crown, which was a natural Right, and not to be destroyed by a positive Law.

VI. Lastly, It was represented on the King's Behalf, that having now reigned thirty-eight Years, and all along led an Innocent Life, without having given any Person Cause to complain of him, it would be a very great Piece of Cruelty to strip him of the Crown.

This Argument seemed to be of great Weight; But the Duke of York's Friends replied, that Henry being incapable of governing by himself, to leave him in Possession of the Crown, was not doing him a Kindness so much as the Queen and her Ministers, who abused his Name and Authority. Moreover, that it was not fit the whole Kingdom should should be ruined for his Sake, or a Wrong done from a Motive of Charity, 1460.

One may easily judge that these and several other Reasons It is decreed that the King should enjoy the Crown during Life. alleged by the two Parties, were displayed and set off to the best Advantage, especially in the Parliament, where there are generally a great many ingenious Men. This was a very proper Subject to exercise the Wits, difficult in it self, and still more so by the present Posture of Affairs. At length, after a Debate of several Days, it was resolved, that Henry should enjoy the Crown during his Life, and the Duke of York be declared his Successor. This Resolve was passed into an Act of Parliament, which ran, That notwithstanding the Duke of York's indisputable Title to the Crown, he had freely consented that Henry should possess it for his Life, and was willing to swear Allegiance to him as to his lawful Sovereign. But if in Case the King should come in any manner whatever to break this Agreement, then the Crown should immediately be devolved to the Duke of York or his lawful Heirs.

It is very likely that the Duke of York had carried his Views farther than this came to. However he sat content- The Duke of York consents to the Decree. ed, because he saw plainly that it would be a very hard Matter to obtain better Terms without coming to open Force. It cannot be denied, that he behaved in this with a Moderation somewhat uncommon on the like Occasions. In his present Circumstances, and according to the Rule generally Instances of his Moderation. followed by Parliaments of declaring for the strongest, nothing was more easy for the Duke than to get the Crown awarded to him immediately. He had at his Beck a victorious Army, which at that Time could not be withstood. Besides the Majority of the Members of Parliament were of his Side, and in all Appearance, after having gone so far as to acknowledge his Title was indisputable, they would not have wanted much Sollicitation to take one Step farther and place him on the Throne. It is therefore evident, that if the Parliament did any Thing in Favour of Henry, it was because they thought themselves at Liberty to deal thus equitably by him, maugre the Duke's victorious Army 1460.

Historians have been partial to him.

my which might have over-ruled them, if he had been minded to make use of his Advantage. It must likewise be observed, that the Duke of York was older than the King, and therefore naturally could not expect to out-live him. Notwithstanding all this, they who have writ the History of these Troubles, have never failed to give an ill Turn to whatever is related of this Prince. It is no difficult Matter to guess at the Reason. As the House of York did not sit on the Throne above Twenty-four Years, we have no Historian that wrote in that Interval, and all those that we have are of later Date, and writ since the Restoration of the House of Lancaster in the Person of Henry VII. This is what must be always remembered in reading the History of this Civil War.

Procession at St. Paul's.

The Day after passing the Act I have just mentioned, a Procession was made at St. Paul's, where the King was present with his Crown on his Head, and attended by the Duke of York.

The Duke is absolute Master of the Government.

Since Matters were thus settled, the King continued the same Man. Though it was easy for him to perceive the great Prejudice the Agreement he had lately made brought to his Family, and particularly to the Prince of Wales his Son, he lived quietly under the Servitude he was reduced to, without thinking of Means to set himself free. Satisfied with whatever the Duke of York was pleased to suggest to him, he gave himself up wholly to religious Exercises, and left the Publick Affairs to be managed as they thought fit who ruled in his Name. Thus the Duke finding himself absolute Master of the Government and Person of the King, caused him to sign an Order requiring the Queen to repair to him. The Duke was very sensible this Order would be to no Purpose. But his Aim was to render her Criminal, in refusing to obey the King her Spouse, and so justify thereby whatever he intended to do against her. He thought she had no Remedy left, and in that Belief imagined he had nothing more to do than to find some Pretence to lay an insuperable Obstacle in the way of her Return, in order to get rid of so dangerous an Enemy. But he relied too much on his own good Fortune and the Queen's Weakness

The King orders the Queen to repair to him.

Weakness. Instead of being discouraged at the ill Posture of the King's and his Family's Affairs, she was already returned to England with the Prince of Wales her Son, and had drawn together in the North an Army of ten Thousand Men. The better to gain the People of those Parts to her Side, she had caused a Report to be spread, that she gave them leave to plunder the Country on the South of the Trent. In all Appearance, this was the chief Means that helped her to such a Number of Troops.

1460.
She levies an Army in the North.

The Duke of York had been well informed of the Queen's Attempts to levy an Army, but he did not know she had made so great a Progress; nevertheless he thought he could not be too speedy in opposing the Execution of her Designs. He set out therefore from London with four or five Thousand Men only, leaving Orders with the Earl of March his Son, to lead the rest of the Army into Wales to refresh the Men, and then come and join him. As he advanced towards the North, he received the sad News of the great Success the Queen had had in the raising of Troops. At length being come near Wakefield in the County of York, he heard the Queen was advancing towards him at the Head of eighteen Thousand Men. Whereupon he resolved to retire to his Castle of Sandale, till the Arrival of the Earl of March. He knew very well the Queen, who had no Artillery, could not force him in that Castle which was pretty strongly fortified; and he did not question but the Earl his Son would speedily come to his Relief.

The Duke of York goes against her with 5000
Men only.

He retires into San-dale-Castle.

The Queen was heartily vexed to see her Enemy thus sheltered from all Attacks. As she was then vastly superior in Number of Troops, if the Duke would have fought she might have flattered herself with certain Success. But she was not sure that after the Arrival of the Earl of March, she should be in the same Circumstances. For this Reason she did all she could to provoke her Enemy, and induce him to come out of his Retreat. As she did not despair of compassing her Ends, she took the Precaution to lay a Body of Troops in Ambush behind a Hill *. Then she appeared

The Queen provokes him to fight.

* She is said to place an Ambush on each Side Wakefield-Green, under 1460. ed before the Walls of Sandale-Castle, and provoking the Duke all manner of ways, one while threatening him, another while sending him Challenges, and upbraiding him that a Man who aspired to the Crown should suffer himself to be thus braved by a Woman.

The Duke resolves to fight.

The Duke of York had till then acted with a great deal of Prudence and Conduct. During the Wars of France, where he had often commanded in Chief, he had shown no less Wisdom than true Valour. But on this Occasion he let his Courage get the better of him, contrary to the Opinion of his Friends, who advised him to despise those vain Reproaches. Apparently, his Animosity against the Queen, hurried him as it were in spite of his Teeth to commit a Blunder unpardonable in a General of so established a Reputation. In this Manner at least Historians have represented the Matter. For my Part, if I may be allowed to speak my Opinion, I must confess I see but little probability in this Account. I should rather think that the want of Provisions put him under a Necessity of fighting, in order to avoid the Danger which hung over his Head. Wherefore if he committed a Fault, it was in shutting himself up in a Castle, instead of returning back, or going to meet his Son, who could easily come and join him. Be this as it will, he marched out of Sandale, and drew up his Troops on Wakefield-Green, counting that his Courage and Experience would supply the Defects of his Army. He was no sooner drawn up, but he saw himself attacked by the Queen's Troops, who being much more numerous than his, had a great Advantage of him. Whilst he was hard pressed in the Front by Enemies stronger than himself, those that lay in Ambush issued out, and attacked him in the Rear. This unexpected Assault bred such Confusion among his Troops, that in less than half an Hour they were put to flight, and he himself lost his Life, bravely fighting. The young Earl of Rutland his second Son not above twelve Years old, flying with his Governour, was overtaken

The Battle of Wakefield, where York is slain.
December.

The Earl of Rutland killed by Clifford.

der the Command of the Lord Clifford and Earl of Wiltshire. Her main Army was led by the Dukes of Somerset and Exeter.

vertaken by the Lord Clifford, who plunged his Dagger into his Breast, notwithstanding the earnest Intreaties of the Governour to spare the young Prince's Life *. Afterwards the same Lord Clifford lighting upon the Body of the Duke of York, cut off the Head; and crowning it with a Paper-Crown, fixed it on the end of his Lance, and went and presented it to the Queen, who ordered it to be set up on the Walls of York.

Thus fell the Duke of York, aged about fifty Years *. One may say that never was Prince so near a Throne and not seated in it, and that it lay wholly in his own Power to take Possession, had he been willing to use the Force which he had in his Hands. I shall not take upon me to blame or justify him with regard to his Pretensions. I leave the Reader to judge for himself, upon the Grounds which have been already explained in several Places. Unluckily for this Prince, those that writ the History of England, at the Time when the Restoration of the House of Lancaster was still fresh, I mean in the Reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII, have given an ill Turn to all his Actions. Those that came after them, not content with taking the Facts as they found them related, have likewise copied the Reflections, and even the very Invectives. By so doing they have all unanimously given the Cause for the House of Lancaster; instead of leaving their Readers at Liberty to pass an impar-

Remark on the Partiality of Historians to the House of Lancaster.

* He is said to have killed that Day so many with his own Hand, that he was thenceforward called the Buscher. His Father Thomas Lord Clifford having been slain in the Battle of St. Albans by the Duke of York, this Lord Clifford (as Grafton says,) swore he would not leave one Branch of the York Line standing.

* His Corps were first interred at Pontfract, but afterwards in the Collegiate-Church of Fotheringhay. The Duke of Somerſet (his chief Opponent) said of him, that if he had not learned to play the King by his Regency in France, he had never forgot to obey as a Subject when he returned to England. By Cecily Daughter of Ralph Nevil Earl of Westmoreland, he had as some say, 8 Sons, (Henry, who died young, Edward Earl of March, afterwards King Edward IV, Edmund Earl of Rutland, John, William and Thomas, who all dyed young, George Duke of Clarence, and Richard Duke of Gloucester, afterwards King Richard III.) and four Daughters. Dugdale.

1460.

*The Earl of Salisbury
beheaded.*

The Earl of March resolves to maintain the Quarrel.

tial Judgment upon so difficult a Point, the Decision whereof, should the same Case happen again, would be no less intricate now then it was then. The Earl of Salisbury having had the Misfortune to be taken Prisoner in the Battle, was carried, notwithstanding his Wounds, to Pontfract, where he lost his Head on the Scaffold *. The Queen ordered it to be set up by the Duke of York's.

Such was the Issue of this Battle, which was fought on the last Day of December, hard by Wakefield , from whence it took its Name. This Battle looked as if it would have firmly restored the Affairs of the King and Queen, and yet it served only to hasten their Destruction, and give the House of York a speedier Ascent to the Throne. The Earl of March having had notice of the Defeat and Death of the Duke his Father, was not at all dismayed at the News. On the contrary, he resolved to maintain the Quarrel, let the Consequence be what it would, and lose his Life or go through with the Designs of the deceased. After what had passed, there was no middle Way left, one of the two Houses must necessarily be established upon the Ruins of the other. The Earl of March was then in Wales, ready to march to the Assistance of the Duke his Father. His Army was three and twenty Thousand strong, besides what he had left at London under the Command of the Earl of Warwick, for the Defense of the Metropolis. Thus finding

* His Body with that of Alice his Wife, sole Daughter and Heir to Thomas Montacute Earl of Salisbury, and his Son Thomas (slain in the Battle) were in 2 Ed. 4. Feb. 15. buried at Bisham Abbey in Berkshire. He had Issue four Sons (Richard Earl of Warwick, John Marquis of Montague, Sir Thomas: George Bishop of Exeter, Chancellor of England, and then Archbishop of York;) and five Daughters. Dugdale.

 A Town in the West-Riding of Yorkshire, famous for its Cloth Trade, Largeness, neat Buildings, Markets; and for the Bridge upon which King Edward IV built a very neat Chapel in Memory of those that were cut off in this Battle. The carved Work of Stone upon the Chapel was very beautiful, but is now much defaced. On the Right-Hand of the Road from Wakefield to Sandal there is a square Plot of Ground hedged in from a Close, whereon (before the Civil War between King Charles and the Parliament) stood a Cross of Stone, where the Duke of York was slain. The Owners are obliged by Tenure to keep up this Hedge. Camb.

ing himself strong enough to go in quest of the Queen, he wished for nothing so ardently as to have an Opportunity to revenge the Death of his Father.

1460.

Whilst the Earl of March was taking this Resolution, the Queen advanced towards London, with design to make sure of that great City, which alone was able to influence the Fortune of either Party. But hearing upon the Road that the Earl of March began to move, she detached Jasper Tudor Earl of Pembroke to go against this new Enemy, whom she did not imagine to be so strong as he was. The Earl of March being informed that the Queen was marching towards London, had already altered his Course, and instead of going to meet her, taken likewise the Road to London, to try to be before-hand with her. But having Intelligence of the Detachment which was coming against him, he thought not fit to go between the two Armies of his Enemies, which he must have done if he had kept on his Rout. Wherefore coming to a sudden Resolution, he turned back to go and meet the Earl of Pembroke. He met him at Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire; and as he was much superior in Numbers, defeated him with ease, and slew Two Thousand Eight Hundred of his Men. The Earl of Pembroke had the good Fortune to escape. But Owen Tudor his Father according to some, or more probably his younger Brother *, being taken Prisoner, was beheaded with several others, in Revenge of the Earl of Salisbury.

The Queen marches towards London, and sends Pembroke against the Earl of March.

Pembroke is defeated.

Owen Tudor is beheaded.

The News of this Defeat which reached the Queen on the Road, prevented her not from continuing her March towards London. She verily believed, that by appearing at the Gates of the City with an Army that had vanquished the Duke of York, she should put the Inhabitants in such a Fright, that they would of their own accord drive out the Earl of Warwick. The Truth is, the Earl himself seemed to be of the same mind, since he chose rather to go out and fight the Queen than stay in London: The which doubtless he would not have done, had he been sure of the City. The Queen being come to St. Albans, received certain Advice

The Queen keeps on her march to London.

The Earl of Warwick goes out to fight her.

* Owen Tudor the Son is said by most of our Historians to take the Religious Habit at Westminster.

1461.

that the Earl of Warwick was marching towards her with his Army, reinforced with a Body of the Train-Bands of London, and bringing the King along with him. The Queen's Army was made up of *Northern Troops, who committed such prodigious Ravages, that it was one of the chief Reasons why the Londoners chose to join the Earl of Warwick. If these Troops had entered the City, their All would have been in danger from such Guests.

He is defeated at Bernard's Heath.
Feb. 17.

The Queen
free's the King.

Her Troops plunder St.
Albans.

She demands Provisions of the Mayor of London.
The Mob oppose it.

The two Armies meeting near St. Albans on Bernard's-Heath, began a Fight, which at first was very fierce on both Sides. But Lovelace, who commanded one of the Wings of Warwick's Army, not having charged soon enough, either through Treachery or for some other Reason, Victory declared for the Queen, and the Vanquished lost Two Thousand Eight Hundred Men. She had at the same Time the Satisfaction to free the King her Spouse, whom the Earl of Warwick durst not venture to leave at London. She used her Victory with the Barbarity too common in Civil Wars, beheading several Persons of Distinction, particularly the Lord *Bonville and Sir Thomas Kiriell, though the King had granted them their Lives. As her Troops had voluntarily engaged in her Service without her having wherewithal to pay them, she could not hinder them after the Victory from plundering the Town of St. Albans. These Northern Soldiers affirmed, that they had not taken up Arms but upon Promise given them that they should have the Plunder of the Country lying South of the Trent. This Pretension of theirs inspired the Inhabitants of London and the Country round, with a Terror which proved very prejudicial to the Queen. Provisions being grown exceeding scarce in her Army, by reason of the great Licentiousness of her Troops, she sent to the Mayor of London for a Supply, who not daring to deny her at such a Juncture, ordered several Carts to be loaded. But just as they were going out at the Gate the Mob stopped them, and

* Welsh, Scotch and Irish, besides English.

* He was one of those who had the Custody of the King after he was taken at St. Albans, and had stayed with him at his Request.

and told the Mayor that they would not suffer Provisions to be sent to an Army which was come on purpose to plunder the Country. The Mayor not being able to help this Disorder, made his Excuse to the Queen, and put her in hopes that he would let her into the City as soon as the People were somewhat appeased.

1461.

Whilst the Queen was taken up at St. Albans with treating with the Mayor of London, the Earl of March was advancing with all the Speed possible, that he might inspire the Londoners with the Resolution to keep their Gates shut against the Queen, by the Consideration of his approaching Assistance. And indeed the News of his March did not a little contribute to the spinning out the Negotiation between the Queen and the Mayor, the which proved the Ruin of her Affairs. As soon as she heard that the Earl of March was approaching, and had strengthened his Army with the Remains of the Earl of Warwick's, she chose to retire into the North. Besides, that she was no Match for her Enemy, she justly dreaded she should be refused admittance into London in case she advanced that way, and obliged to join Battle at the Gates of the City, too well inclined to countenance her Enemy.

The Earl of March approaches London.

The Queen retires towards the North.

The Earl of March overjoyed that the Queen voluntarily yielded him the Metropolis, entered as it were in Triumph in the Beginning of March. He was received with the Acclamations of the Citizens, who, several Years since, had as good as declared against the Court. The Caution wherewith the late Duke of York had thought fit to proceed, had been so much to his Prejudice, that the Friends of the Earl his Son judged it absolutely necessary to strike a bold Stroke, and place him at once in the Throne. After sundry Consultations upon the Matter, they resolved not to run the Hazard of the Delays of a Parliament; but to proceed to an extraordinary Election, first by the People, and then by the Nobles. They were of Opinion that this Method could be justified by the Act of Parliament, which ratified the Convention made between the King and Duke of York, and that it was unnecessary to stay for a fresh Confirmation.

The Earl enters London,

His Friends resolve to place him on the Throne.

Pursuant

1461.
Extraordinary Election of the Earl of March.

Pursuant to this Resolution, the Earl of Warwick drew up his Army in St. John's Fields, and having caused the People who were come to the Sight to be cast into a Ring, he stood in the midst, and read aloud the Agreement between the King and Duke of York, with the Act of Parliament whereby it was ratified. Which done, he told the People that it was notorious that Henry had violated this Agreement, and by that had forfeited, according to the Act of Parliament, his Right to the Crown. But after all, I do not see upon what ground he could charge the King with what the Queen had done, since he was all the while as it were a Prisoner at London: Neither was he any more his own Master since he was with the Queen. Be that as it will, the Earl of Warwick raising his Voice, asked the People who stood round him whether they would have Henry of Lancaster for King? The whole Multitude crying, No, No: He demanded whether according to the Agreement just read to them, they would have Edward, Son of the late Duke of York, for Sovereign? To which all the People replied with Acclamations which shewed their Consent.

Assembly of the chief Men who adjudged him the Crown.

This first Step being made, and the Peoples Mind being, as was pretended, sufficiently known, a great Council was called of all the Bishops, Lords, Gentlemen and Magistrates in and about London. Edward being present in this Assembly, set forth his Title to the Crown, as well by Birthright as by the Agreement above-mentioned, and demanded that it might be awarded him. A Man must have been very hardy to dispute his Pretension at such a Juncture. And therefore with one Consent the Assembly declared that Henry of Lancaster had forfeited his Right of enjoying the Crown during his Life, by the Breach of the solemn Agreement made with the Duke of York, and ratified by the Parliament; and that it was devolved to Edward, eldest Son of the Duke of York. Upon this Declaration, the Crown was offered the Duke, who accepted it, modestly confessing his Insufficiency, and adding, that although his Youth and small Experience made him fearful of taking upon him so weighty a Charge, he would however use his utmost Endeavour to render his People happy with God's help.

help. On the Morrow he went in Procession to St. Pauls, where he sat in the King's Seat, with the Scepter of St. Edward in his Hand *. The Archbishop of Canterbury having asked the People whether they would have Edward Earl of March for King; the People answered with loud Acclamations. Then the King took Homage of the Lords that were present. The Ceremony concluding with singing Te Deum. Edward was conducted with great Solemnity to the Bishop of Exeter's Palace, where Henry was wont to lodge, when he was within the Walls of the City. Next Day being the 5th of March, he was proclaimed at London and the Country round, by the Name of Edward IV.

1461.

Thus ended the Reign of Henry VI. which had lasted Thirty-eight Years and a Half, without his ever concerning himself with the Administration of the Publick Affairs. It does not even appear that he troubled his Head much about Events, which however were, for the most Part, such as would affect a Prince, that had been of another Temper. He was fitter for a private Life than for a Crown. His great and only Defect was a kind of natural Imbecility, which rendered him incapable to govern by himself. Ever ruled by those who managed the Affairs in his Name. His Capacity reached not so far as to see the Consequences of the Counsels given him, which to him seemed always good. In this he widely differed from the King his Father, whose Genius was always superior to that of his Ministers. As to the rest, he was chaste, temperate, extremely religious, abhorring Cruelty and Injustice. It was these Virtues which have served for Foundation to the Praises bestowed on him by several Historians, and which have made some look upon him as a true Saint. The Truth is, these Virtues would have rendered him an accomplished Prince, had they been attended with the Qualifications of a Sovereign. But being alone, they served only to make him an honest Man,

End of Henry's Reign.His Character.

* He went first to St. Pauls, from whence he was conveyed in State to Westminster-Hall, where he sat in the King's Seat, and took Homage. Then he went in Procession to the Abby, and was placed in the Choir as King, whilst Te Deum was sung. That done, he returned by Water to St. Pauls, and lodged in the Bishop's Palace.

1461. Man, and at the same time a very indifferent King, not to say worse. The Weakness of his Understanding rendered him contemptible to his Subjects: But the Innocency of his Life hindered their Contempt from ever turning into Hatred:

Causes of the Decay of the English Affairs in Henry VIth's Reign.

During the first Year of his Reign his Affairs was in a prosperous State, because they were managed by the Dukes of Bedford and Gloucester his Uncles, Princes of very able Heads, and who had his Interests at Heart. : And if ever in their Life-time Affairs began to fall to decay, one may say it was not so much by their Fault, as by some unforeseen Accidents which all the Prudence in the World could not have prevented. After the Death of the Duke of Bedford, Henry suffered himself to be guided by the Cardinal of Winchester and the Duke of Suffolk, who, acting not from the same Motives, and minding only their own Affairs, compleated his Ruin. Afterwards Queen Margaret by her uncommon Abilities; might have put his Affairs again in a flourishing Condition. But the Honour of the King, and Welfare of the Nation, were what was least in her Thoughts. Her sole View was to engross all the Power, and make use of the King's Name to justify her Passions. The Ministers she employed were all of the same Character. It is not therefore at all strange that the King's Affairs should thus be hurried to Destruction. The Death of the Duke of Gloucester will be an indelible Stain in Margaret's Reputation, and unhappily this Crime returned but too hasty upon the King's own Head, since he had not the Resolution to hinder it or punish its Authors. Accordingly it was manifest that Heaven took publick Vengeance of this Murder, by the Civil War which ensued; and which brought on the Ruin of the King, the Queen, the Prince their Son, and the whole House of Lancaster.

Henry VI. was Thirty-nine Years and about a Quarter old when he was stript of a Crown which he had wore from almost his very Birth*. He still lived long enough to be
the

* In the first Parliament of his Reign the Queen-Mother came and sat among the Lords with the young King in her Lap.

the Sport of Fortune, as we shall see in the following Reign. Edward his Son, Prince of Wales, was in his Nineteenth Year at the Time of this Catastrophe *.

* The most remarkable Things during this Reign were these: The Art of Printing being found out at Mentx in Germany by John Guttensberghen, was brought into England by William Caxton of London Merchant, who first practised the same in the Abby of Westminster in 1471.

In the 23d Year of this Reign it was enacted in Parliament, That when Wheat was sold for six Shillings and Eight-pence the Quarter; Rye for four Shillings, and Barley for three Shilling, it should be lawful to export the said Kinds of Corn into foreign Parts without Licence.

The King himself founded King's College in Cambridge (afterwards enlarged by Henry VII. for a Provost, 70 Fellows and Scholars, &c.) and likewise Eaton-College by Windsor, for a Provost, 8 Fellows, a Choir, and 60 Scholars. Queen Margaret began Queen's College in Cambridge, which was finished by Edward IV's Queen her Enemy. Archbishop Kemp built the Divinity School at Oxford; and St. Paul's Cross as it now stands. William Eustfield Mayor of London, built at his own Charge the Water-Conduit in Fleet-street; and John Wells Mayor of London, the Conduit commonly called the Standard in Cheap.

Edward the Third is justly reckoned the First of our Monarchs that coined Gold, and this in so beautiful a Manner, that his Rose Noble (forty five out of a Pound of Gold) has merited the Esteem of a Medal. In Henry IV's Reign the Rose-Nobles changed their Name and Value, being now called Rials, Half-Rials, and Quarter-Rials, and went at Ten Shillings, Five Shillings, and Two and Six-pence. On one Side he is crowned with an Arched Crown seated on a Throne, with a Scepter in his Right-Hand, and a Globe in his Left, inscribed, Henricus Dei Gra. Rex Angl. & Fran. Das. Hib. On the Reverse, the Arms of France and England quartered, and Iesus autem transiens, &c. The Silver Money were Groats, Pence, Half-pence, and Mails or Farthings. There were likewise Gold Farthings. It is agreed that his Money first carried the Arched or Imperial Crown.

The End of the Reign of HENRY VI.

A DISSERTATION ON THE MAID of Orleans.

THE Actions of JOAN of ARC, commonly called the Maid of Orleans, made formerly a great Noise in the World. We find them related in the Histories of France and England, with Circumstances which favour all of the Marvellous. Most of the Writers upon this Subject have scarce left their Readers the Liberty of reasoning and judging; but have formally decided the Matter; some by affirming that Joan of Arc was inspired by God; others, that she was an Instrument of the Devil. However they all agree in making it believed that what she did could not be performed without a supernatural Assistance. In the mean Time impartial and unprejudiced Readers find great Objections against both these Opinions. As they do not see how Religion can be any way concerned in the Actions of the Maid of Orleans, they think it equally hard to believe that God should be pleased either to raise her up in a supernatural manner in Defense of Charles VII. or give

give the Devil an extraordinary Power to make her his Instrument to ruin the Affairs of the English in France. Hence several have been induced to embrace a third Opinion, namely, that the pretended Inspiration of Joan of Arc, was nothing but a Contrivance which the Inventors imagined would produce the Effect it did indeed produce. This Diversity of Opinions, joined to the Wonders one beholds in the Actions of a poor Country Girl, naturally raises a Curiosity to know the Truth. Wherefore I am persuaded that it will not be unacceptable fairly to examine this Matter, with the sole view of coming as near the Truth as possible. As I design to be as brief as the Thing will allow, I shall set aside the Learning which such a Subject would admit of, and content my self with relating the Facts and Testimonies which may serve to set this Business in a clear Light, and with making some Remarks upon the whole. They who are impatient to go on with the History of England, may safely omit reading this Dissertation, without fear of losing any Thing absolutely necessary to be known.

In the first Place it must be observed, that we have but one single cotemporary Author, who has given an Account of the Maid of Orleans. All that writ after him have added something to what he relates, in order to embellish their History. Monstrelet is the Author I mean. He was one of the Retinue of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, and had himself seen this Girl. But he is exceedingly upon the Reserve in what he says of her. He never gives his Opinion of her, and the Reason of his behaving thus is very evident. Joan having made her Appearance whilst the Duke of Burgundy was in Alliance with England. Monstrelet with all of that Party, did not believe her inspired. But as he writ not his Chronicle till after the Duke was reconciled to King Charles, he thought not proper to combat in his Writings the general Opinion of the French, who were then his Master's Friends. On the other Hand, as in all Appearance in changing Sides, he had not changed his Opinion of Joan, he took care to say nothing which might make it thought he lay under the same Prejudice with the rest of the Frenchmen. It seems to me therefore that we may take Monstrelet for a Guide, who of whatever Opinion he was, has said nothing to render him suspected. The Truth is, he never says either that Joan was, or was not inspired.

He has inserted in his Chronicle a Letter written in the Name of Henry VI to the Duke of Burgundy, to acquaint him with what had passed at the Tryal and Condemnation of the Maid of Orleans. This Letter might be justly suspected of Partiality, if the Facts mentioned therein did not, for the most Part agree with the Records of the Tryal which I shall speak of presently. Wherefore this Letter is a farther Means to help us to discover the Truth,

We have moreover a third Means which is both the amplest and most considerable, namely, Joan's Examination and Answers, of which the famous Stephen Pasquier has given us the Particulars. Pasquier says, he had the original Tryal of the Maid of Orleans four whole Years in his Hands, and that what he has related was faithfully extracted thence. But we must carefully distinguish what Pasquier says as of himself from the Records of the Tryal. He was so strongly prejudiced in favour of Joan, that he could not help being in a Rage with those of his Countrymen who did not believe her inspired. He says they showed themselves by that, worse than the English, and were extremely injurious to the Honour of France. Wherefore not to consider only his private Opinion, he may be said to have justly rendered himself suspected by one of the Parties. But the Tryal itself is an original Piece beyond all Suspicion, since we find there Word for Word, the Maid of Orleans's own Answers to the Articles she was interrogated upon.

Monstrelet's Chronicle, the King of England's Letter to the Duke of Burgundy, and the Tryal of the Maid of Orleans, are the three Evidences which must be examined in order to be able to pass a true Judgment in this Affair. As to Facts related in the Histories of France and England, which are not drawn from these three Fountains, I do not think they ought to be much regarded. It is evident that the the Historians have copied, without any previous Examination, those that writ before them, and that several have made it their Business to embellish their Story, by relating more Wonders than there really were. If we may believe some of them, Joan worked Miracles, foretold future Events, knew Secrets which no Body but the King alone was conscious of; her Heart was found whole and entire amongst the Ashes after she was burnt; and out of the Flames which consumed her Body, was seen to fly a white Dove, the Emblem of her Chastity. According to these Historians, Joan had the Command of the Convoy which entered Orleans, and led the Besieged to the Assault of the English Redoubts. By her sole Advice the Battle of Patay was fought, and to her Valour the French were indebted for their Victory. In a Word, they pretend that Joan did All, and left King Charles's Generals only the Honour of following her, and fighting under her Banners. In all this they doubtless go beyond the Truth. The surest Way is to keep to the three Authorities abovementioned, which it will be necessary to examine. I shall begin with Monstrelet, and cite some Passages of his Chronicle, essential to the Point in Hand, for it would be too tedious to copy all he has said considering the Maid of Orleans.

“ Now in the Year abovesaid, came to the King Monstrelet
 “ at Chinon where he resided, a young Damsel about 20 “ Years old (a), called Joan, cloathed and dressed like a “ Man. She was born in the Parts between Lerrain and “ Burgundy, at a Place called Droyms (b), not far from “ Vauconleurs. The which Joan was a good while a Ser“ vant in an Inn, and had the Courage to ride the Horses “ to Water, and likewise to perform other Feats which “ young Girls are not wont to do. And being turned a“ way, she was sent to the King by a certain Knight called “ Sir Robert de Baudricourt, Captain under the King, of “ Vauconleurs, who furnished her with Horses, and four “ or

(a) She was then 27 Years of Age; for in her Examination in the Year 1431, she declared she was 29 Years old, consequently when she came to the King in 1429, she was 27 Years of Age.

(b) It should be read Dampre.

“ or five Attendants. She stiled herself Pucelle [or Vir- “ gin,] inspired with Divine Grace, and said she was sent “ to the King to put him in Possession of his Kingdom,
 “ of which he was wrongfully deprived. Her Condition “ was but mean. She was about two Months in the King’s “ Palace, whom she several Times admonished to let her have “ Men and Aid, and she would repulse his Enemies, and “ exalt his Dominion. During which Time the King and “ his Council gave no great Credit to whatever she could “ say, but took her for a Mad-woman, and one out of her “ Wits. For to so great Princes and other Noblemen, such “ or the like Words are very doubtful and dangerous, as “ well on Account of the Wrath of our Lord chiefly, as “ of the Blasphemy [or Slander] which one might incur “ from the Talk of the World. All her Words were in “ the Name of God; whereby the greatest Part of those “ that saw and heard her speak were strongly perswaded “ that she was inspired by God, as she herself affirmed.
 “ She was several Times examined by notable Clerks and o“ ther learned Men of great Authority, that her Intention “ might be more fully known. But she always kept to her “ Point, saying, if the King would be pleased to believe “ her, she would restore him to his Dominions. — When “ she came before the King, there were present the Duke “ of Alençon the King’s Marshal, and several Generals. For “ the King had held a Council about the Affair of the Siege “ of Orleans, and from thence went to Poitiers, and this “ same Maid with him. Shortly after it was ordered that “ the Marshal should carry Provisions and other Necessaries “ to Orleans by Force. Joan had a Mind to go along with “ him, and requested that she might have a Suit of Armour “ and Man’s Cloaths, the which she was furnished with.
 “ Presently after she set up her Standard and went to Blois, “ where the Rendezvous was, and from thence to Orleans “ with the rest. She was always compleatly armed. In “ this Expedition many came and listed under her. And “ when she was come to Orleans, she was made very wel“ come, and abundance of People were overjoyed at her “ coming”.

This

This is all Monstrelet says of Joan of Arc till her Entry into Orleans. Hence it may be observed, that it was not she that commanded the Convoy, but only that she attended the Marshal with some who had listed under her. As to the storming of the Redoubts, it seems at first Sight from what he says of it, that Joan commanded in all the Sallies. But afterwards he says: “ And notwithstanding that in “ these Three Assaults, the said Joan is reported by com“ mon Fame to have had the chief Command, yet all or “ the most Part of the noble Knights and Captains were “ in them, who during the Siege, had been in the City of “ Orleans, and behaved each for his Part valiantly, as War“ riors ought to do on such Occasions”. He does not fail however to commend her Valour very highly in several Places. For Instance, speaking of the March of the French Army after the raising of the Siege of Orleans, he says: “ Joan was ever in the Front before her Standard.
 “ And in all the Marches about, her Fame at once was “ spread, as if there had been no other Warrior but her self”.

After he had described the Battle of Patay, he adds these Words; “ And especially Joan acquired on such Occasi“ ons so great Praise and Reputation, that all People ima“ gined the King's Enemies would be no longer able to “ stand against her, and that shortly by her Means the King “ would be restored and re-established in his whole King“ dom”.

In fine, not to cite too many Passages of this Author, it will suffice to observe in a Word, that whenever he mentions the Inspiration of the Maid of Orleans, he never tells us what he himself thinks of the Matter, but always says, that she called her self inspired. He is so very cautious in this Point, that in speaking of what the Duke of Burgundy said to her, when he went to see her after she was taken, he pretends not to remember it, though he was himself an Ear-witness. His Words are these: “ The Duke went to see “ her at the Place where she was lodged, and gave her “ rough Language, which I have forgot, though I was “ present”. It is easy to see that the Duke's rough Words were Reproaches for having seduced the People, and Memaces places upon that Score. But Monstrelet chuses rather to be silent than say any thing pro or con.

He relates moreover, that a few Days before Joan threw herself into Compiègne, she had fought François d'Arras, and having taken him Prisoner, cut off his Head. But he does not say, whether justly or not, contenting himself with relating the Fact, without giving his Thoughts of it.

When he comes at last to her Condemnation, he expresses himself in such a Manner, that he does not discover his own Sentiments of the Matter. He only transcribes the King of England's Letter to the Duke of Burgundy about that Affair. As that Letter is an Original which may help to find out the Truth, it will be proper to insert it at length.

Most Dear and Beloved U N C L E,

“ T H E fervent Affection which we are sensible you “ have, as a true Catholick, for our Holy Mother the Church, and for the Exaltation of our Faith, “ justly exhorts and admonishes us to notify to you in “ writing, what, to the Honour of our said Holy Mother the Church, to the Strengthening of our Faith, and “ to the Extirpation of pestiferous Errors, has been lately
 “ in this our City of Roan solemnly transacted.

“ It is well known almost every where by common Report, how the Woman who called herself Joan the Virgin went about two Years and upwards, contrary to the “ divine Law, and the Condition of her Sex, dressed in “ Man's Clothes, a Thing abominable in the Sight of God, “ and in such Garb was brought to our mortal Enemy and “ yours, to whom and to those of his Party, Churchmen, “ Nobles and Commonalty, she frequently gave to understand that she was sent from God, presumptuously “ boasting that she had personally and visibly conversed “ with St. Michael, and great Numbers of Angels and “ Saints of Paradise, as St. Catharine and St. Margaret:
 “ By which Forgery, and the Hopes she gave of future “ Victories, turned the Hearts of many Men and Women “ from the Truth, to Fables and Lies. She likewise put “ on on Arms appointed for Knights and Squires, and set up a Standard. Moreover, she demanded with great Boldness and Confidence to bear the most excellent Arms of France, which she obtained in part, and bore in several Incurfions and Assaults, as did her Brothers also, according to Report: Namely, Azure, Two Flower-de-Luces, Or, and a Sword with the Point upwards, and on it a Crown. In this Posture she took the Field, and led Men at Arms and Archers in Bands and great Companies, to commit and exercise inhuman Cruelties, by shedding human Blood, by raising Seditions and Commotions among the People, carrying them to Perjury, Rebellion, Superstition, and false Opinions; by disturbing all true Peace, and kindling mortal Wars; by suffering herself to be honoured and revered as a Saint; and by working other damnable Deeds, too tedious to relate, which however were well known in several Places, and at which almost all Christendom was offended. But the Providence of God having taken Pity on his faithful People, and been pleased not to let them remain long in Danger, nor to continue in vain, pernicious, and novel Opinions, which they had rashly embraced, has permitted through his great Goodness and Mercy that the said Woman should be taken in your Army at the Siege you carried on for us before Compiègne, and put by your good Means into our Power. And because we were immediately required by the Bishop of the Diocese wherein she was taken, to deliver over to him as to her ordinary Ecclesiastical Judge, the said Joan branded with the Crime of High-Treason against the Divine Majesty:

 We, as well out of Reverence to our Holy Mother the Church, whole Orders we justly prefer to our own Will and Pleasure, as also for the Honour and Exaltation of our Holy Faith, put into his Hands the said Joan to be brought to her Tryal, without suffering our secular Judges to take Vengeance upon her, as we might lawfully have done, considering the great Damages and Mis-chiefs, the horrible Murders, and detestable Cruelties, with innumerable other Crimes she had committed against “ Us and our dutiful loyal People. The said Bishop “ joined with him the Vicar of the Inquisition of Errors “ and Heresies; and having called in the Assistance of a “ great and notable Number of solemn Masters, and Doc“ tors in Divinity and Civil Law, began with great So“ lemnity and due Gravity the Tryal of the said Joan.

 “ And after he and the said Inquisitor, Judges in the Cause, “ had for several Days interrogated the said Joan, they or“ dered her Confessions and Assertions to be maturely ex“ amined by the said Masters and Doctors, and in general by “ all the Faculties of our most dear and beloved Daughter
 “ the University of Paris, before whom the said Confes“ sions and Assertions were laid. By the Opinion and De“ termination of whom, the said Judges found Joan “ guilty of Superstition, Witchcraft, Blasphemy against “ God and his Saints, Schism, and of erring greatly in the “ Faith of Jesus Christ. And in order to restore and “ bring her back to the Union and Communion of our “ said Holy Mother the Church, to cleanse her from her “ horrible and pernicious Crimes and Wickedness, and to “ keep and preserve her Soul from eternal Damnation, she “ was frequently and for a long while together very chari“ tably and calmly admonished, that she would reject and “ cast away all her Errors; and would likewise humbly re“ turn to the Way and Paths of Truth, or that otherwise
 “ she would greatly endanger both her Soul and Body.
 “ But the most pernicious and divided Spirit of Pride “ and outrageous Presumption, which is always endeavou“ ring to destroy the Union and Safety of Christians, pos“ sessed and held so fast bound the Mind of Joan, that “ notwithstanding all the holy Doctrine or Counsel, or “ other mild Exhortation which was administered to her, her “ hardened and obstinate Heart would not be humbled or “ mollified. She still boasted, that every thing she had “ done was performed by the Command of God, and the “ said holy Virgins who had visibly appeared to her. And “ what is worse, she would recognize no Judge on Earth, “ except God alone and the Saints in Paradise, casting off “ and rejecting the Judgment of our holy Father the Pope,
 “ and

“ and of a General Council, and the Universal Church Mi“ litant. Whereupon her said Ecclesiastical Judges seeing “ her keep so long and so obstinately to her Resolution and “ Purpose, ordered her to be conducted to the Church, be“ fore the Clergy and People there assembled in great Mul“ titudes; in the Presence of whom her wicked Purposes “ were set forth, exposed and declared solemnly and publick-“ ly by a notable Doctor in Divinity, to the Exaltation of “ our Faith, the Extirpation of Errors, the Edification “ and Amendment of Christian People. After which,
 “ she was charitably admonished to return to the Union “ of Holy Church, and reform her Faults and Errors, “ wherein she was hardened. And therefore the said “ Judges proceeded to pronounce upon her the usual and “ customary Sentence in such Cases. But before the Sen“ tence was fully pronounced, she began in appearance to “ cast off her Resolution, crying out, she would return “ to Holy Church. The which was readily and gladly “ heard by the said Judges and Clergy, who kindly re“ ceived her, hoping by that Means her Soul and Body “ would be saved from Destruction and Torment. Then “ she submitted to the Ordinance of Holy Church, abju“ red with her own Mouth her Errors and detestable “ Crimes, and make a publick Recantation, signing the “ Instrument with her own Hand. And thus our compas“ sionate Mother Holy Church rejoicing over this repent“ ing Sinner, glad to find and restore this strayed and lost “ Sheep to the rest of the Fold, condemned the said Joan “ to do Penance in Prison. But hardly was she there, be“ fore the Fire of her Pride, which seemed to be extinguish“ ed, burst out afresh into pestiferous Flames by the Sug“ gestions of the Enemy. And presently the said unfortunate “ Joan relapsed into her former Errors and Follies, which “ she had abjured and recanted in the Manner aforesaid.

“ For which Reason, according as it is decreed by the “ Church, she was again publicly declaimed against, to “ the End she might not hereafter infect the rest of the “ Members of Christ. And as she was relapsed into the “ wretched Crimes and Faults she had been accustomed to,

“ she was delivered over to the secular Arm, and condemn“ ed to be burnt. Perceiving her End was at Hand, she “ plainly owned and confessed that the Spirits which she “ said appeared to her several Times, were evil and lying “ Spirits, and that the Promises they had frequently made “ to free her, were false. So she acknowledged she had “ been deceived and mocked by the said Spirits, and pur“ suant to her Sentence, she was carried bound to the old “ Market Place in Roan, and there publicly burnt in the “ Sight of all the People.

Before we come to her Tryal, it will not be amiss to see a Letter which she is said to write to the King of England and his Generals, before the Siege of Orleans was raised.
 Here it is, just as John de Serres a French Historian has given it us.

“ King of England, do Justice to the King of Heaven, “ in his Royal Blood. Restore to the Virgin the Keys of “ all the good Cities you have forced. She is come from “ God to claim the Blood Royal, and is ready to make “ Peace, if you are willing to do Justice, and return what “ you have taken away, O King of England; but in Case
 “ you will not, I am Chief of the War. In what Place “ soever I light on your People in France, I will make them “ depart whether they will or no. If they will submit, I “ will take them to Mercy. The Virgin comes from the “ King of Heaven, to drive you out of France. If you “ will not obey, she will raise such a Combustion as the “ like has not been in France this Thousand Years. And “ be assured that the King of Heaven will send to her and “ her good Men at Arms stronger Forces than you can have.
 “ Go in God's Name into your own Country. Persist “ not obstinately in your Opinion; for you shall not hold “ France of the King of Heaven, Son of the Holy Mary.
 “ But King Charles the Right Heir shall hold it, to whom “ God has given it, and who shall enter Paris with a noble “ Train. You, William Poullet Earl of Suffolk, John Lord “ Talbot, Thomas Lord Scales, Lieutenants of the Duke of “ Bedford, and you Duke of Bedford, styling yourself Regent
 “ of

“ of France, spare innocent Blood. Leave Orleans at Liberty. If you do not Justice to those you have injured, the French will perform the noblest Exploit that was ever done in Christendom. Hear these Tidings from God and the Virgin. ”

This Letter writ in a Prophetick Style, by a Girl who pretended to be sent from God, and appears so certain of the Future, ought to contain nothing but what should be found to be exactly true afterwards. And yet we see in it Predictions which never came to Pass. For Instance, it is not true that she made so much as one single Englishman leave France. She affirms likewise, that she will make so great a Combustion or Havock that the like had not been seen this Thousand Years in France. These Words can relate only to the raising the Siege of Orleans, and the Battle of Patay. But the first of these Actions has nothing in it extraordinary. That a Garrison should make a Sally and drive the Besiegers from their Posts, is a Thing too common to be reckoned a Miracle. As to the Battle of Patay, supposing Joan had commanded the French Army, which she did not, can that be said to be so mighty a Matter as to deserve to be expressed in the Terms she uses? The English were in all but six Thousand, and lost two Thousand five Hundred. That Defeat hardly bears any Proportion to those of the French at Crécy, Poitiers, Azincourt, the first of which was but a Hundred Years before the Time of the Maid of Orleans, and the last but thirty or forty.

It is further remarkable, that in her Letter she speaks as if she were actually at the Head of the Armies of France, since she calls upon the King of England to return her the Keys of all the Towns in his Possession. And yet the Letter must have been writ whilst she was only upon the March with the Convoy designed for Orleans. In which Convoy, according to Monstrelet, she got leave as a sort of Favour to make one, so far was she from being entrusted with the Command. I say nothing of her speaking to the King of England as if he was then a Man, though he was but nine Years old, exhorting him not to persist obstinately in his Opinion, Opinion, nor of her admonishing him to go out of France, though he was then in England, these Things may be passed over as being written in a Prophetick Stile, and taken as so many Figures of Speech. But she should at least have known the Names of those she addressed herself to, and not have called the Earl of Suffolk, Paullot, when his Name was de la Pole. To mistake the Name of Foreigners, may be easily excused in common Persons. But I do not know whether such a Fault is to be pardoned in one who pretended to speak in the Name and by the Authority of God. These and several other Reasons, which it would be too long to insist upon, induced me to believe that this Letter was written after the Event, by some Body that knew the Maid of Orleans had really writ to the King of England, or the Duke of Bedford, as we shall see presently.

Let us proceed now to the Tryal of Joan of Arc as we find it in Pasquier. I say to the Tryal, and not to the Sentiment of that Author who lived too long after her for his Testimony to be of any great Weight. It suffices to say with regard to him, that he every where speaks of her with great Commendations, and believed she was really inspired, and sent by God to save France. Here follows her Examination and Answers, which I shall abridge as much as possible, without rendering the Sense obscure.

In the first Place, being charged to speak the Truth, she replied, she would say what concerned her Father and Mother; but that she would not disclose the Revelations she had told King Charles, but that in eight Days she should know whether she might speak of them or no.

To the second Question concerning her Name and Family, she answered, that she was of the Village of Dompre, that in her own Country they called her Jaquette, but in France, Jeanne d' Arc. That her Father's Name was James of Arc, and her Mother's Isabella, &c.

That she was then about Twenty-nine Years old.

That she was by Trade a Seamstress and Spinster, and not a Shepherdess.

That she went every Year to Confession.

That

That she frequently heard a Voice from Heaven; and that in the Place where she heard the Voice, she saw also a Light which she took for an Angel. That the Voice had often warned her to go into France, and to cause the Siege of Orleans to be raised. That she should go to Robert de Baudricourt Captain of Vaucouleurs, who would give her a Guard to conduct her; which she did accordingly.

She added, that she knew very well that God loved the Duke of Orleans, and that she had had more Revelations about him than about any Person living except the King.

Item. She confessed she was engaged in a Skirmish before Paris on a Holyday, and being asked whether that was Right, she answered, Go on.

Being asked when she heard the Voice last, she replied, Yesterday, three Times, in the Morning at the Time of Vespers, and when the Ava Maria Bell rung in the Evening.

Being interrogated, whether she had ever seen any Fairies, she answered, No; but that one of her God-Mothers pretended to have seen some at the Fairy-Tree just by the Village of Dompres.

Being examined who they were that spoke to her, she answered, St. Catherine and St. Margaret, and that she had frequently seen and touched them since she was in Prison, and kissed the Ground on which they trod. Moreover, that she consulted them about her Answers.

She said further, that she had put on Man's Cloaths by the express Command of God, and that she was wounded in the Neck before Orleans.

Item. That before seven Years were over, the English should leave a greater Pledge than what they had left before Orleans, and should lose all they held in France.

That they should sustain in France a much greater Loss than what they had already done, by means of a great Victory which the French should gain over them.

Being asked whether she bore any Coat of Arms, she answered, No, but only her Standard. That it was true the King had given her Brothers a Coat of Arms, namely,
In

In a Field Azure, two Flower-de-luces, Or, and a Crown in the Middle.

She added that her Father dreamt she would go for a Soldier, and for that Reason kept her short, and said he had rather see her drowned.

Then they charged her with throwing herself headlong from the Tower in order to kill herself, whilst she was a Prisoner at Beaurevoir. She confessed the Fact, but said, her Design was not to kill herself, but to make her Escape.

During her Tryal, she desired leave to hear Mass and communicate at Easter. The which was granted her upon Condition she would put on Woman's Cloaths; but she chose rather to go without it, than hear Mass at that rate.

She was taxed with suffering herself to be worshipped. But she replied, that if some People had kissed her Hand or Cloaths, it was not with her Consent.

After these Answers, there follow several others which give ground to believe that they were made to as many Interrogations, which Pasquier thought fit to pass over in Silence. Here they are all together.

That she had talked with St. Catharine and St. Margaret at the Fairy-Tree, and not with the Fairies, as she had been accused of. That she began at thirteen Years of Age to converse with these Saints.

That at twenty Years old, she hired herself at Neufchâtel in Lorraine, to an Inn called La Rouffe, and there led the Beasts to Grass, and watered the Horses, and by that means learned to ride on Horse-back.

That whilst she was there, she had a Law-Suit about a Marriage, before the Official of Thoul, and carried her Cause.

That after serving five Years, she returned to her Father's House, and that in spite of him, she went to Bandriacourt, who made no Account of her for the two first Months, but in the third, he gave her a Guard of twenty Knights, a 'Squire, and four Servants, to conduct her to Chinon where the King was.

The Judges having earnestly urged her to put on a Woman's Habit : She replied, she desired to have none of her Sex's Clothes, but a Shift after she was dead.

Whereupon she was told that she should not be received to Communion but in Woman's Clothes : but she refused to comply with that Condition. However, she consented at last to take a Woman's Habit to hear Mass, provided she should be allowed to put on Man's Clothes again. But as they refused to grant her that Favour upon that Condition, she declared she would rather die than wear the Habit of a Woman contrary to God's express Command.

She said likewise, that she had promised the King to raise the Siege of Orleans, and caused him to be crowned.

She was taxed with being always against a Peace ; the which she owned, affirming there could be no Peace concluded, unless the English would leave France.

The Proctor having charged her with causing a Sword to be hid in St. Catharine's Church at Fierbois, and sending for the same Sword, after she had talked with the King, she denied that she had ever used any Frauds. She owned however that she had heard three Masses in that Church.

Upon her being accused of saying that she was sent from God to wage War, the which was directly contrary to the Will of God, she answered, that in the Letter which she had sent to the King of England and the Princes of the Blood, she had first offered them Peace. Pasquier says, the Letter is copied in the Tryal. But as he thought not proper to transcribe it himself, one cannot be sure that it is the same de Serres has inserted in his History.

Upon being charged with putting to Death Franquet d'Arras her Prisoner, she replied that he was a Robber, known for such, and was condemned to die by the Bailiff of Senlis.

To the Charge of having several times communicated in Man's Clothes, and kneeled to the Voice which spoke to her : She confessed it all.

The Proctor accused her also of having seduced abundance of People to such a Degree, that several revered her as a Saint, caused Prayers to be said in the Church to her Honour, maintained that next the Holy Virgin she was the greatest of Saints, and wore about them her Image in Lead or some other Metal. To this Charge she replied, that God should be the Judge.

Upon being accused of having usurped the Dominion over Men by making herself Head of the War, she answered, that she had done so to beat the Englisb. And added, her Standard was of Linnen or Fustian, bordered with Velvet, with a Field seeded with Flower-de-Luces, and in the Middle the Image of God holding the World, supported by two Angels in white, and underneath Jesus Maria.

Whereupon her Judges upbraided her, that she was in the wrong to ascribe unto God such Vanities, contrary to the Reverence due to him; and asked her whether she put her Confidence in her Standard; to which she replied, she placed her Confidence only in him whose Image it bore.

After this, she was asked why she held alone her Standard at the Coronation of King Charles: She answered, that it was but just that he who had been in Trouble should be likewise in Glory.

She was told further, that being wounded before Paris, she had caused her Armour to be hung up in the Church of St. Dennis, out of Ostentation; She replied, she did it from a Motive of Piety, according to the Custom of those that are wounded in the Wars.

Lastly, She was asked if she would submit to the Judgment of the Church-Militant. She made Answer, that she would, provided the Church did not enjoin her what was impracticable. That she could not in any wise revoke what she had said about her Visions and Revelations; and that if the Church affirmed they were Illusions or Fancies, in that case she would not refer the Matter to the Judgment of Men, but to God alone.

The Examination being ended, the Judges drew up a Summary of her Confessions. Containing,

I. That being Thirteen Years old, she saw St. Michael, St. Catharine, St. Margaret, and a great Company of Angels.

II. That

II. That these Saints advised her to go to King Charles, and to wear Man's Clothes.

III. That she chose rather to go without hearing Mass and communicating, than put on her Sex's Habit.

IV. That she refused to submit to the Judgment of the Church-Militant.

V. That she pretended to foretel future Contingencies.

VI. That she knew Saints by their Voices, whom she had never seen or heard before.

VII. That she was expressly commanded by God to wear Man's Clothes.

VIII. That she cast herself headlong from a Tower, chusing rather to die than to be in the Hands of her Enemies.

IX. That she not only saw and heard, but likewise touched bodily St. Catharine, and St. Margaret, and kissed the Ground on which they trod.

The Proctor having asked Advice upon these Articles, he was told by the Judges, that what Joan of Arc had done was all a Cheat, and the Invention of the Devil to deceive the poor People. That she was guilty of Disobedience to her Parents, and of Idolatry, to the Dishonour of the Church; particularly, for having chosen rather to deprive herself of the Body of our Lord, than lay aside Man's Clothes. At this Sentence were present the Bishops of Coutance and Lisieux, the Chapter of the Cathedral of Roan, Sixteen Doctors, Six Licentiates, or Bachelors of Divinity, and Eleven Advocates of Roan.

This Sentence being sent to the University of Paris, was confirmed there by the Body of Divines, and ratified by a Decree, and Joan pronounced Heretick and Schismatick. Which done, the University writ to the King and the Bishop of Bayeux, to desire she might be put to Death. It does not appear by what Pasquier says, what her Punishment was to be by this first Sentence. All that can be said of it is, that she was excommunicated at last. Be this as it will, Joan being carried into the Church, and placed on a Scaffold, was publicly preached, as they called it in those Days. All these Preparations having struck her with a great Terror, she cried out aloud, that she would submit to the Judgment of God and the Pope. But finding what she had said was not sufficient to cause her Sentence to be revoked, but that they were proceeding to publish it, she declared, she would stand to what the Church should enjoin her: That since so many wise and learned Men affirmed that her Visions came not from God, she was willing to believe so too, which she repeated several times. Then she made a publick Abjuration, which was inserted in the Tryal; but Pasquier thought not fit to give us the Contents.

Upon her abjuring her Errors, another Sentence intervened, absolving her from the Bond of Excommunication, and condemning her to perpetual Imprisonment by way of Penance. After that, she put on Woman's Apparel. But as she had all along shown great Obstinacy with regard to Man's Clothes which she wore, she said, by God's express Command they thought proper to try whether her Abjuration was sincere, by leaving with her in Prison a Man's Habit. This Expedient succeeded but too well to her Misfortune, since she was no sooner alone, but she put it on. On the Morrow, being found in that Dress, she was asked the reason of it: to which she replied, That she had put on her former Habit by the express Order of St. Catharine and St. Margaret, and that she had rather obey God than Man. Whereupon, an Information was entered against her in the Ecclesiastical Court, and she was declared an Heretick Relapse, and delivered over to the Secular Power. Pasquier says nothing of the Confession she made according to the King of England's Letter, that she had been seduced by lying Spirits, who had promised to set her free. Indeed this Confession is directly contrary to the Inferences which Pasquier could draw from the Particulars of the Tryal, namely, that Joan was inspired by God. He only says, she was sentenced to be burnt May the 31st, 1431. But as all the rest of the Facts mentioned in the King's Letter exactly agree with the Circumstances of the Process, I do not see why Pasquier's Silence should cause this to be called in question.

One

One might make numberless Reflections upon the Examination, Answers and Behaviour of the Maid of Orleans. But not to tire the Reader's Patience, I shall content myself with making a few Remarks.

In the first Place, it is certain Pasquier's View in what he has related of this Tryal, was to prove Joan's Inspiration. And therefore prejudiced as he was, he made no scruple to curtail in several Places the Questions and Answers. This manifestly appears, in that several of the Answers have no manner of Connexion with the Questions, nor with one another. For Instance, what she says in her Answer to the second Question, touching the Duke of Orleans, necessarily supposes some other Question, which Pasquier thought fit to omit.

2. It appears that he has passed over in Silence some of the Replies: For Example, it is said in the Summary of Joan's Confession, that she had boasted of seeing St. Michael, and yet there is no mention of any such thing in the Examination.

3. Pasquier would transcribe neither Joan's Letter to the King of England nor her Abjuration: Things of no less Importance however, than all he has produced upon that Subject. Much more unwilling was he to mention the Confession she made before she died, that she was seduced or deceived. These Omissions give occasion to presume, that Pasquier sought in Joan's Tryal not so much what might be of Service to him in discovering the Truth, as what he believed would help to prove his Opinion. And indeed, he uses abundance of Words to draw from Joan's Answers, Consequences favourable to his Notion, and to show that she foretold nothing but what came to pass, and said nothing but what was exactly true. He labours most of all to prove by very weak Arguments, that the Duke of Orleans was greatly beloved of God. Among other Reasons he alledges this: That God had blessed that Prince with two Sons, who both were illustrious; the one Legitimate, who was afterwards King of France, by the Name of Lewis XII; the other Natural, namely, that great General, known at first by the Name of the Bastard of Orleans, ans,

and afterwards by that of Earl of Dunois and Longueville. But all the World knows that this last was natural Brother and not Son of the Duke of Orleans mentioned by Joan. It is surprising that a Man so well versed as Pasquier in the History of France, should be guilty of so gross a Mistake.

Having related such Facts concerning the Maid of Orleans as cannot be denied, seeing they are backed by incontrovertible Testimonies, nothing more remains but to examine the three Opinions in this Matter, and to espouse one of them.

Most of the French Writers maintain, that Joan was really inspired and lent by God, and ground their Opinion upon these four principal Reasons. The First is the possibility of the Thing, that God may if he pleases do such Miracles. But this Point may be granted them, and yet they not be able to draw any Inference from the Possibility of the Thing for the Truth of the Fact.

The Second is, Joan's own Evidence, grounded upon her Visions of Saints and Angels. But this is the very Thing in Question, and consequently cannot be urged as a Proof.

The third Reason is taken from her knowing King Charles in disguise among his Courtiers. This does not deserve Notice. Supposing, as a great many do, that Joan was persuaded to act this Part, it is easy to conceive that she might be very well informed how to know the King, though she had never seen him before.

The fourth is grounded upon her foretelling the raising of the Siege of Orleans, and the Coronation of the King, at a Time when there was not the least Shadow of any likelihood of these Things, and upon her Prediction coming to pass. This Reason added to the uncommon Valour which she showed on all Occasions, is doubtless, the strongest that can be alledged for this Opinion. Nevertheless the Objections which lye against this Argument are so weighty, that they very much weaken the Force of it, if not wholly destroy it.

First, It may be objected, that it is she herself who said in her Examination, and after the Event, that she had foretold to the King the raising of the Siege of Orleans, and his Coronation. We have seen above that Monstrelet does not make her speak so very plainly. He contents himself with making her say to the King in general Terms, That she would exalt his Dominion, and drive his Enemies out of the Kingdom; which however she did not perform, seeing the English were not chased out of France till above Twenty Years after her Death.

Moreover Joan says in her Examination, that these two Things were revealed to her by St. Catharine and St. Margaret. I do not mean to enter here upon all the Objections which may be made to this Matter. I am willing to suppose that God reveals sometimes to the glorified Saints what is to happen upon Earth; that he commands them to assume human Shape to inform certain Persons of the Future; and that Catharine and Margaret were of the Number of these glorified Saints, though no Body can affirm it with Certainty. But however it cannot be denied at least that God very rarely makes use of such Means, and that when he does so, it is always with a View to his own Glory or the Good of his Church, or for the sake of some Persons very eminent for their Holiness. Now in the War which was then waging in France, neither the Glory of God, nor the Honour of Religion, nor the Good of the Church were directly concerned; And Charles VII., for whose sake, upon the present Supposition, God did so great Things, was famous for any Thing sooner than a Holy Life. The Dispute between the two Kings was purely about temporal Concerns. They both professed the same Religion, and could not tax one another either with Schism or Heresy. One cannot see therefore wherein it could be for the Glory of God, or the Advantage of Religion or the Church, that the Realm of France should be governed by a Prince of the House of Valois, rather than by a King of England, descended by the Female-Line from the Blood Royal of France. A Man may affirm as much as he pleases, that the Usurpation of the English was so heinous and manifest, that God's Honour was concerned in making them an Example of his Justice. This is supposing a Thing in Question. One need only read what has been said upon this Point in the Reign of Edward III, to be satisfied that the Supposition is not so manifest as is pretended; and that it is liable to strong Objections. But though it were undentable that the English were real Usurpers, can it be affirmed that it concerns God's Honour to punish in an exemplary and supernatural Manner the heinous Acts of Injustice committed in the World? How many Usurpations of Provinces and Kingdoms do we meet with in History, without any Miracle interposing to punish the Usurpers? In fine, we do not see that Charles VII or his Successors did Religion so great Service as for the sake of that God may be presumed to do what was done by the Means of Joan of Arc. Besides the French in those Days were no better Christians, nor honest Men than the English. As for the Person of King Charles VII, in whose behalf it is pretended that God miraculously raised up the Maid of Orleans, no Body is ignorant that he led a most irregular Life. To say nothing of the Murder of the Duke of Burgundy, committed by his Order and in his Presence, contrary to the Faith of a Treaty ratified with an Oath, is it not certain that at the very Time Joan came to him at Chinon, he lived in open Adultery with Agnes Sorel, in the Eyes of his whole Court? Are they such kind of Princes whom God usually honours in a particular manner? If to all these Reasons is added Joan's Confession before her Death, that she was deceived, there will be ground to be satisfied that she was not inspired. But I insist not on her Confession, because it is a disputable Point, since it is grounded only upon the Testimony of her Adversaries.

was

I come now to the Opinion of the English, who stiffly maintain, that Joan of Arc was a Witch, and acted only by the Instigation of the Devil. I shall only observe in a Word, that this Opinion is liable to the very same Objections as the foregoing one, since it is full as hard to conceive, why upon this Occasion God should have given such Power to the Devil. So that all that has been said concerning her her Inspiration, is applicable to her Witchcraft, and may be retorted upon the English.

But there is a Third Opinion which is not liable to so many Difficulties. If we suppose, that in the Extremity King Charles was in, he himself, his Queen, Agnes Sorel, or some one of his Ministers, having invented this Contrivance, nothing will be more easy than to reconcile the Events with this Supposition. The Business was to revive the Courage of the French, disheartened by so many Losses, and it may be of the King himself who was thinking of retreating into Dauphiné. Is it to be wondered at, that such an Artifice should be made use of to that Purpose? This is at least as possible as the Apparitions of Saints, or as Witchcraft. They may have pitched upon a Country Girl of good Sense, as some such there are, of an undaunted Courage, and who knew how to ride on Horseback. They may have chosen one out of the Kingdom that she might be the less known, and that impertinent Neighbours might not obstruct the Execution of this Project, by letting the World know what she was. Supposing the Case so be thus, it will be very easy to account for most of the Things which appear uncommon in the Maid of Orleans. All that the King said of her, and the Secrets which she told him, will be only carrying on the Cheat. Those that were in the Plot would not fail to extol her, and the rest would suffer themselves to be drawn in by their Authority.

It must not however be concealed that strong Objections may be made against this third Opinion, which it will be proper to answer.

The First is, that it is only Conjecture. I own it. But then it is a very natural Conjecture in a Matter wherein it is so hard to discover the Truth. The French say that she was inspired by God. It is made appear that this Notion is full of Difficulties, and that they who espouse it have not Probability on their Side. The English affirm she was a Witch, and an Instrument of the Devil. This is no less hard to conceive. It is however certain that she performed great Actions. What remains therefore in order to unfold the Cause of the Revolution happened in France, but to have recourse to natural Means, since the supernatural ones are so doubtful, not to say worse? In my Opinion, if ever Conjecture is to take Place, it ought to do so in the present Case.

The second Objection is taken from Joan's uncommon Valour, which they would fain have pass for supernatural. To this it may be answered, that it is certain a great deal more is ascribed to her than she deserved, as appears by the Testimony of Monstrelet a cotemporary Writer. A Man must needs be very ignorant of the way of the World not to know to what immoderate Lengths one is apt to go on the like Occasions, and how capable such a Subject is of Imbellishment. It does not appear by what Monstrelet says, that Joan ever commanded in Chief. If he seems to say it in one Place, he corrects himself in another, as may be seen in the Passages above cited. It is true, the Generals carried her along with them, and placed her at their Head, on purpose to confirm the Prepossession of the Soldiers. So that she needed only to show Resolution enough to keep always near them, and such a Resolution cannot be accounted miraculous. As for their ascribing to her the Honour of all the Successes, there is nothing very strange in that. It was no more than what the Interest of the King and of those that served him required.

The third Objection is the strongest, grounded upon the fulfilling of Joan's Predictions. She told the King, she would cause the Siege of Orleans to be raised, and himself to be crowned; which fell out accordingly. One must therefore, in supposing that it was only a Contrivance, suppose at the same Time that she had the Gift of Prophecy.

To this Objection it may be replied in the first Place, that the Assurances wherewith the French Historians have asserted that her Predictions were before the Event, is what gives it the greatest Weight. But it must be observed that of the two Articles, namely, the raising of the Siege of Orleans, and the Coronation of the King at Rheims, the First only is attested by Joan herself in her Examination, without any mention of the King's Coronation. And further, this very Attestation comes after the Event; neither is there any

any good Proof to be had that when she came to the King, she gave him Assurance that she would cause the Siege of Orleans to be raised. As Monstrelet relates the Case, it does not appear that Charles relied upon her Promises, when he undertook to send a Convoy to Orleans. Monstrelet says, that he was resolved to send a Convoy to that City, and that Joan desir'd to be one of the Company, the which was granted her. Surely if that Design had been formed merely upon her Promises, she would have had no need to desire to be present at the executing it, since in that Case she would have been the chief Manager.

But in the second Place, supposing Joan had foretold what is attributed to her, I do not know whether that would be a convincing Proof. Upon Supposition that she was perswaded to act this Part, and that she had her Lesson given her beforehand, nothing was more natural than to make her tell the King she was commissioned to raise the Siege of Orleans. This Siege was then the Cause of great Uneasiness to the King and the whole Court. They did not know what Course to take to save that important Place, and consequently there was a Necessity of giving hopes of raising the Siege, in order to make it believed that Joan was sent from God. In so doing nothing was hazarded but the Reputation of a poor Country Girl, of which no great Account would have been made, in case the Business had miscarried. As to the King's Coronation, there was occasion also to put him in hopes of it, since the raising of the Siege was but a Means to attain the chief End, which was to place the King on the Throne of his Ancestors.

In the third Place, to Joan's Predictions a very puzzling Objection may be made. If she was inspired by God to foretel the Future, whence came it to pass that she was mistaken? She said that she would drive the English out of the Kingdom, and yet they were not driven out till above Twenty Years after her Death. She foretold that they would be expelled by a great Victory which the French should get over them. This gives the Notion of a very bloody Battle, and of an uncommon Victory. But where do we find any such Thing after the Death of Joan of Arc?

There is none but the Battle of Fourmigny, which happened twenty Years after, and was of very little Consequence, as has been observed. She foretold likewise in her Examination, that before seven Years were at an end, the English should leave a greater Pledge than what they had left before Orleans. I do not know what that Expression means, unless it signifies the Loss of some Battle. But there was no Battle within that Space of Time. Let us however give these Words the most favourable Sense they are capable of: Let us understand them, if you please, of the Loss of Paris. But this Event happened five Years after the Prediction. Is it usual for the Holy Ghost to mark out thus the Space of seven Years instead of five? Was it not full as easy for him to foresee that this Event would come to pass in five Years as in seven?

Wherefore, all things considered, let a Man compare the Difficulties of the Third Opinion with those that arise from the Apparitions of Saints and Witchcraft, and I am persuaded he will find the Third Opinion the most probable of the Three.

Besides, the Inspiration of the Maid of Orleans was not so generally owned by the French themselves, but that several questioned it. The Constable Richmond being upon the March to join the King before Baugenci, the King prepossessed that he was coming with some ill Design, resolved at first to go and fight him. But altering his mind, he sent Joan to meet and receive him. As soon as she saw him, she alighted from her Horse, and embraced his Knee: Whereupon the Constable said these Words to her, which plainly show what he thought of her: Joan, I am told that you have a mind to fight me. I neither know who you are, nor by whom you are sent here; whether by God or by the Devil: If you come from God, I have no reason to fear you, for he knows my Intention as well as yours; If you are from the Devil, I have less Reason to be afraid, and therefore do your best or your worst.

The Lord of Langey in his Treatise of Military Institution, says, that Joan's Inspiration was of the same Nature with with Nana's pretended Conversations with the Nymph Egeria.

Others have affirmed, that she was persuaded to play this Part by the Lords of the Court. De Haillan was of this Opinion, who even relates several Circumstances in Confirmation of it. After which he adds, Some have taken it ill that I say this, and put the French out of Conceit with so holy and miraculous a Thing, by endeavouring to make it all a Fable. But I was willing to do so, because Time, which discovers all Things, has discovered this to be a Cheat. Besides, it is not a Matter of that Moment as that it ought to be believed as an Article of Faith.

Pope Pius II, under the Name of Gobelin his Secretary, having given us the Story of Joan and her Exploits, adds, It is a very difficult Thing to affirm whether this was the Work of God, or the Invention of Man. Some think that the great Men at Court being at variance about the Command, some one more wise than the rest found out this Contrivance, and prevailed with Joan to give out that she was sent from God, to the End no one might scruple to serve under her.

In fine, there are French Writers who have defamed Joan of Arc, and said, That she was corrupted by Baudricourt, or according to others by the Bastard of Orleans, or by Xaintrailles, and that these three Lords, together with the Duke of Alençon, hatched the whole Plot. Polydore Virgil says, that when Joan found she was condemned, she pretended to be with Child, and for that Reason her Execution was put off for some Months. In a word, among all the Historians antient and modern, who have spoken of the Maid of Orleans, there are not Two who agree in the Facts relating to her.

As to the rest, supposing Joan's Inspiration was a pure Invention, it is not easy to determine whether the King was in the Secret, or whether he was himself cheated. It may be Joan herself was deceived, by certain Ways and Means which have but too often been practised. For my Part, I think this Opinion very plausible, considering the firm Resolution and Courage with which she answered her Judges, when she could not but perceive the extreme Danger

ger she was in. But after all, this is nothing but Conjecture.

I conclude from the Examination I have made, that a Man may reasonably suppose that Joan's pretended Inspiration was all a Contrivance to revive the Courage of the dismayed Frenchmen. It is true, the Project succeeded without doubt beyond the Expectation of the Contriver. Nevertheless, it is not very strange that the French Troops should take Heart again, when they imagined they were fighting under the particular Direction of Heaven. This is not the first Time that the like Invention has produced the like Effect. We meet with Instances of it in the Histories of Heathen Nations. The feigned Appearances of the Pagan Gods and Goddesses, were not surely the immediate Works of the Power of God, and yet upon certain Occasions they produced prodigious Effects.

Before I conclude this Subject, I cannot help reflecting on the barbarous Usage Joan met with. It is not possible to colour it any way. As Joan was not a Native of France, Henry could not pretend she was his Subject, and consequently he could not use her but as a mere Prisoner of War. Upon this Supposition, he could much less punish her for a Schismatick, Heretick or Witch, even though she had been convicted. If the Rule which the English would then have established was once received, there would be no Prisoner of War but what would be in danger of being condemned by his Enemies for forged Crimes, and of falling a Sacrifice to their Malice. Charles VII. got the Sentence to be annulled by other Judges, and Joan's Honour to be repaired. And upon this several go in order to prove her Innocence. But this is a weak Foundation, since, without strong Prejudice, a Man cannot depend upon the last Sentence any more than upon the first. The former was passed by her Enemies, whose Interest it was to defame her; and the latter by her Friends, to whose Glory and Advantage it turned to make her appear Innocent.

The End of VOLUME V.

T H E I N D E X.

N. B. K. stands for King, K^r for Kingdom, the Letter (n.) before the Number of the Page, means the Note at the Bottom of the Page.

A

- A C S taken by the French, 357
 Acts of Parliament, 7. of Indemnity, ibid. 47, 78.
 for freedom of Elections, 60.
 for excluding the Women from the Crown, ibid. against false Returns, 72. to prevent Abuses in the freedom of Elections, 92
 Agnes Sorrel K. Charles's Mistress, 257, 282, 307
 St. Albans, first Battle there between the Houses of Lancaster and York, 355. second Battle, 384
 — Plunder'd by the Queen's Troops, ibid.
 Albany (D. of) forms a Design of seizing the Crown of Scotland 63. starves Prince David, ibid.
 his Negotiations with K. Henry V, 190. dies, 225 Albemarle (D. of) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV,
 19. discovers the Plot, 21
 Albret Constable of France, harrasses the English, 122. a great Blunder of his in choosing the Place of Battle, 126. killed at the Battle of Azincourt, 133
 — Tartas restored to that Family, 357 Alenson, Conference there, 169
 — (D. of) his Courage at the Battle of Azincourt, 131. gives K. Henry a furious Blow, ibid. killed, ibid.
 — (D. of) his Character, 218. taken Prisoner at the Battle of Vernevil, 247 released, 271.
 puts an end to a Civil War in France, 270
 Alexander V. Pope, 70 Alien

I N D E X.

Alien Priories. The Revenues of them granted by the Clergy to K. Henry V, 111 Allegiance, The English offer to take the Oath of Allegiance to K. Henry V, before he was crown'd, 90
Ambassadors sent by K. Henry IV to several Courts, 15. to Scotland, 17
Angoulême (E. of) his Character, 218 Anjou (D. of.) See K. of Sicily.
 — (Charles of) becomes K. Charles the VIIth's Favourite, 308
Armagnac (E. of) made Constable of France, 135. persecutes the Burgundians, ibid. besieges Harfleur, 140. gets Queen Isabella removed from Court, 155. taken and imprisoned by the Burgundian Faction, 159. murdered, &c. ibid.
 — (E. of) cited before the Parliament of Toulouse, 356. depriv'd of his Part of Comigné, ibid. applies to K. Henry VI, and offers him one of his Daughters, 357. takes possession again of Cominge, 362. oust'd a second time, ibid. made Prisoner by Treachery, 364
Armagnacs slaughtered, 159
Arras (Congress of) 316. a Treaty concluded there, 318, 319
Arundel (Thomas) Archbishop of Canterbury, makes a Speech in Praise of Henry IV, 2. dis-* suades the King from seizing the Revenues of the Clergy, 51. obtains an Order to take Informations concerning the Lollards Doctrines, 92. complains to the King of Sir John Oldcastle, 93. dies, 103

 — (E. of) attacks Lagni, 308. defeats the Rebels in Normandy, 310. and retakes several Towns from them, ibid. tries to retake Rue, 345. slain, ib.
Athol (E. of) causes K. James I. to be murdered, 327
Audley (Lord) marches against the Earl of Salisbury, 365. defeated and slain, 366
Azincourt (Battle of) a large Description of it, 124—133

B

B Adby (Thomas) a Lollard burnt, 74
Bajazet made Prisoner by Tamerlane, 30
Baldock (Walter) Prior of Laune hanged, 36
Bardoff (Lord) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV, 54. retires to Scotland, 58. and to Wales, 62. enters a second Time into a Conspiracy against K. Henry, 67. defeated, 68
Bartholomew's-Hospital by whom Founded, 87. n.
Basil (Council of) English Ambassadors sent thither, 309
Bayonne refuses to submit to the French, 337. taken. ibid.
 Beauchamp

I N D E X.

Beauchamp (Richard) E. of Warwick, left Commander in France in the Duke of Bedford's Absence, 260. takes several Castles from the French, 265. defeated at the Siege of Montargis, ibid. made Gouverneur to the King, 276. dies, 348

Beaufort (John) taken Prisoner at the Battle of Baugé, 333. exchanged for the Earl of Eu, ib. created D. of Somerset, ibid.

Beaumont (Lord) slain, 373

Beaumont taken by the French, 242. retaken by the English, 243

Bedford (D. of) defeats the French Fleet, 141. stands Godfather to Prince Henry, 194. comes to France, 196. marches against the Dauphin, 197. K. Henry V. ordered he should have the Administration of Affairs in France, 198. causes K. Henry VI to be proclaimed K. of France, and takes the Title of Regent, 209. his Character, 221. is made Protector, 226. marries Ann Sister to the D. of Burgundy, 230, 231. takes Orlay, 232. and Beaumont, 243. defeats the French at the Battle of Verneuil, 246. appeases a Commotion at Paris, 247. solicites his Brother to join with him in the War against France, 252. comes to England, 260. takes the Title of Protector, ibid. tries to reconcile the D. of Gloucester and Bishop of Winchester, 261. returns to France, 268. marches against the D. of Bretagne, 271. obliges him to abandon K. Charles, ibid. shuts himself up in Paris, 287. sends Garter King at Arms to England with several Instructions, 290. marches against K. Charles, and to the relief of Normandy, 292, 293. drives the E. of Richmond out of Normandy, and takes St. Dennis and Lagni, 294. gives the D. of Burgundy some Towns to keep him firm to the Alliance of England, 298. takes several Places in the Isle of France, ibid. hath the Pucelle of Orleans tried for her Life, 300. the ill State of his Affairs in France, 304. besieges Lagni, 308. marries Jacqueline of Luxemburgh, 310. takes St. Dennis and razes it, 319. dies, 320. his Character and Elogy, ibid. where buried, ibid. n.

Bedford (Duchess of) dies, 309. where buried, ibid. n.

— (Duchess of) See pag. 310.

Bergerac taken by the French, 335

Bernard-Heath (Battle of) 384

Berwick taken by K. Henry IV, 58

Blanch K. Henry IVth's Daughter married to the Earl Palatine, 34

Blanch K. Henry IVth's Widow 34

P P P

con-

I N D E X.

- spires against K. Henry V.*, 157
Bonville (Lord) beheaded, 384
Bourbon (D. of) taken Prisoner at the Battle of Azincourt, treats with K. Henry about a Peace, 151. Articles proposed for releasing him, 296. dies, 297
Bourbon (D. of) takes Corbeil, &c., 315
Bourchier (Thomas) made Archbishop of Canterbury, 347.
Bordeaux resolves to submit to K. Charles, 336. receives the E. of Shrewsbury, 344. taken by the French, 346
 ——— (Mayor of) salies out against the E. of Orval, and is defeated, 336
Boreheath (Battle of), 365
Brabant (D. of) has a Conference with the D. of Bedford, 249. dies, 273
Braine taken by the Brabanders, 253 Bretagne (D. of) dies, 18
 ——— (D. of) viz. John V. carried to the Court of France, 37. an Account of him, 214.
England proclaims War against him, 260. abandons Charles K. of France, and sides with the English, 271. chosen Mediator between France and England, 336. concludes a Treaty with K. Henry VI. 348. dies, 362
 ——— (D. of) viz. Francis complains of Fougères being taken from him, 381. applies to the K. of France for redress, ibid.
Bretaigns infest the Coasts of England, 37. make a Descent on the Western Coasts, 47. at Portland, 49
Buchan (E. of) leads 7000 Scots into Anjou, 188. defeats the D. of Clarence, ibid. made Constable of France, 192. brings K. Charles VII. an aid from Scotland, 237. slain at the Battle of Verneuil, 246.
Buckingham (D. of) bound for the D. of Somerset, 353. commission'd to quell a Sedition in London, 358. made General of K. Henry VI's Forces, 371. slain, 373
 ——— (D. of) wounded at the first Battle of St. Albans, 355. slain, 373 Bulloign bestowed by K. Henry VI. upon the Lord Beaumont, 325
Burgundians become Masters of Paris, 159. make a terrible Slaughter of the Armagnacs, ibid.
Burgundy (D. of) besieges Calais, 66. murders the D. of Orleans, ibid. designs again to besiege Calais, 74. defeats the Inhabitants of Leige, 76. is received at Paris in Triumph, ibid. proposes an Alliance to K. Henry, 96. retires into Flanders, 98, 99. Edicts against him, ibid. K. Charles wars against him, 107. a Peace granted

I N D E X.

ed him, 108. renews the Treaty with K. Henry, ibid. challenges him, 114. claims the Administration of Affairs in France, 135. concert's Measures with the Dauphin, 142. makes a Truce with K. Henry, and does him Homage, 144. Articles of Agreement between them, 146. takes up Arms in favour of K. Henry, 154. approaches Paris, ibid. and enters it, 159. governs in the King's Name, ibid. determines to be reconciled with the Dauphin, 167, 171. breaks off the Conference of Meulant, 172. assassinated, 175
 ----- (D. of) i. e. Philip, makes a League with K. Henry V. and Isabella, 175. Treaty between him and K. Henry, 177, 178. demands Justice against the Murderers of his Father, 185. marries Bonne of Artois, 249. prepares to assist the D. of Brabant against the D. of Gloucester, 250. gives the latter the Lye, and challenges him, 252. sides with K. Charles, 255. does him Homage, 258. defeats the Troops sent by the D. of Gloucester to Jaquelina's Assistance, 273. secures her Inheritance to himself, ibid. how he stood affected since the Turn of the English Affairs in France, 294. marries Isabella of Portugal, 298. besieges Compiègne, Vol. V.

ibid. is offended at the D. of Bedford's marrying Jaquelina, 310. hath an Interview with him at St. Omer's, ibid. they dispute about Precedency, ib. takes St. Valéry, &c. from the French, 311. desires the Pope to absolve him from his Oath to the K. of England, 316. concludes a separate Treaty with K. Charles, 317. sends two Herald's to England to excuse him for making this Treaty. 321. offers his Mediation for a Peace between France and England, ib. openly declares against England, 322. prepares to besiege Calais, 324, 325. his Fleet burnt by the English, ibid. besieges Crotoy, 329, 330. makes another Attempt upon Calais, 332. misses his Aim, ibid. restores the Commerce between England and Flanders, &c. 341. makes a separate Truce with England, 362. urges the Kings of England and France to consent to a Truce, 365
 ----- (Duchess of) gets Conferences about a Peace between England and France to be set on Foot, 349
 Butler (James) created E. of Wiltshire, 353. commissioned to search after the Adherents of the D. of York, 368

Cade (Jack) takes the Name of Mortimer, 391. causes an Insurrection in Kent, ibid. approaches near London, ibid. presents two Petitions to the Parliament, ibid. is led into London, 392. slain, 393.
Caen taken by Henry V. 154. retaken by the French, 310. recovered by the English, ibid.
Calais besieged by the D. of Burgundy, 324, 332.
Cambridge (E. of) conspires against K. Henry V. 119. beheaded, ibid.
Cantorbury (Archbishop of) & See Arundel, Chicheley, Stafford, Bouchier, Kemp.
Carlisle, (Bishop of) his Speech in favour of K. Richard, 10, &c. is imprisoned, 13. enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV. 19. sentenced to Death, dies for fear, 25.
Carmarthen taken by Glendour, 58.
Catharine (Princess) betrothed to K. Henry V. 179. crowned, 188. brought to bed of Prince Henry, 194. returns to France, 196. marries Owen Tudor, 206, 326.
Charité taken by the French, 242, 349.
Charles VI. K. of France, makes War upon the D. of Burgundy, 107. dies, 206, 209.
Charles VII. K. of France, crowned at Poitiers, 211. his Character, 212. his Possessions, 213. receives an aid from the D. of Milan, 233. and from Scotland, 237. leads the Scotch Officers with Honours, &c. ib. his Affairs in a sad Condition, 251. tries to gain the Dukes of Burgundy and Bretagne to his side, 253. is unwilling to discard Louvet, 257. highly incensed with the E. of Richmond, 264. obtains an aid of Money, 278. offers Orleans to the D. of Burgundy, 280. thinks of retiring into Dauphiné, 281. resolves to be crowned at Rheims, 285, 287, 288. several Towns surrender to him, 288, 292. makes an Attempt upon Paris, 293. his Indolence, 307. begins to be weary of La Trimouille, ib. takes a Turn into Languedoc and Dauphiné, 315. marches towards Paris, 329. takes Montereau, 330. and Creil, 350. Leagues formed against him, 349, 353. besieges and takes Pontoise, 351, 352. relieves Tartas, 354. advances towards Guienne, ibid. becomes Master of Comings, 355, 356. St. Sever, Acs, and other Places in Guienne, 357. passes the Winter at Toulouse, ibid. demands of the English an extravagant Satisfaction for the taking of Fougères, 381. seeks occasion to renew the War with England,

- England, 382. takes several Places by way of Reprisal for Fougeres, 383. prepares to recover Normandy, 384. becomes Master of it all, and Guienne, 335, 336. his Son unfeshing great Uneasiness, 343.
prepares to go and chastise him, ibid. sends 10,000 Men into Guienne, 344. dies, 374
Chartres taken by the French, 302
Chesbourg taken by K. Henry V.
158, 160. retaken by Charles
VII. 395
Chicheley (Henry) made Archbishop of Canterbury, 103. endeavours to stir up K. Henry to war against France, 112. dies, 369 Christ's-Hospital, by whom built,
87. n.
Clarendon (Sir Roger) hanged, 36 Clarence (D. of). commands the Sarcons. sent into France, 80. takes Pontoise, left Commander of K. Henry V's Troops in France, 188. slain, 189
Clergy, the Commons present two Petitions against them, 72, 73.
prosecute Sir John Oldcastle, 92. offer K. Henry V. the Lands of the Alien-Priories, 111 Clifford (Lord). killed at the first Battle of St. Albans, 355
----- (Lord) kills vast Numbers at the Battle of Wakefield, 381 n. Surnamed the Butcher,
ibid.
Cobham (Lord): See Sir John Oldcastle. ibid.
----- (Lord) commands part of the D. of York's Army, 372 Commons (House of) are for trying K. Richard in form, 10. advise K. Henry IV. to seize the Revenues of the Clergy, 50, 52. presents two Petitions against the Clergy, 72, 73. and in favour of the Lollards, ibid.
petition the King to seize the Church-Lands, 110. intreat K.
Henry VI. to grant the Cardinal of Winchester a full Pardon, 309. impeach the E. of Suffolk, 388. petition that he should be punished, 390. impeach the D. of Somerset, 352
Cominge (Affairs of) 353, 356
Compiègne besieged by the French, 298 Conduit in Fleet-Street, by whom built. 389. n.
----- (or the Standard in Cheap)
by whom built. ibid.
Conference between the Ambasadors of France and England, 155, 162
Congress of Bernenville, 156. of Alençon, 163. at Pont de l'Arche, 164. at Louviers, 166: of Arras, 316. between Calais and Graveline, 337. at St. Omers, 349. at Louviers, 382 Conspiracies against K. Henry IV.
19. 43, 54
Con-

I N D E X.

Conspiracies against K. Henry V, 118

Conspirators against K. Henry IV, (viz. Dukes of Albemarle, Surrey, &c.) set up a Pretender for Richard, 19. march to Windsor, 22

—(viz. E. of Northumberland, &c.) 43. take up Arms, 44. publish a Manifesto, ibid.

—(viz. Archbishop of York, E. Marshal, &c.) 54

Conspirators against K. Henry V, (viz. E. of Cambridge, &c.) 118

Constables of France. See Albret, Armagnac, Buchan, E. of Richmond.

Constantinople (Emperor of) comes to England, 30

Corn, The Price of it in the 23d. of Henry VI, 389

Courtney (Thomas.) See E. of Devonshire.

Crevant. (Battle of,) 233

Crétoy taken by the English, 234. besieged by the D. of Burgundy, 330

Crusado against the Hutteres, 289

David (Prince of Scotland) marries the E. Dowglas's Daughter, 27

Dauphin scours about the Streets of Paris with 30,000 Men, 97. enters into a League with the D. of Burgundy to drive the Orleans Faction, 99. takes upon him the Government, 107. sends

K. Henry V a Tun of Tennis-Balls, 115. makes the E. of Armagnac Constable, 135. poisoned, 136

Dauphin (viz. John) sends Orders to both the Factions in Normandy to lay down their Arms, 136. concert Measures with the D. of Burgundy, 142. poisoned, ibid.

Dauphin (viz. E. of Ponthieu) persecutes the Burgundians, 143. saved by the Constable in the Massacre of the Armagnacs, 159. flies to Melun, ibid. styles himself Regent, and threatens those that sided with the D. of Burgundy, 159. refuses to sign an Accommodation, 160. offers to make an Alliance with K. Henry, 161. refuses to be reconciled with the D. of Burgundy, 167. proposes K. Henry a Peace, ibid. reconciled to the D. of Burgundy, 171. causes him to be assassinated, 171. besieges Chartres, 193. takes la Charité, and besieges Cosne, 196. retires, 197. sheds a-bundance of Tears at the News of his Father's Death, 210. proclaim'd K. of France, ibid. See Charles VII.

Dauphin. See Lewis.

Devonshire (E. of) sides with the D. of York, 339.

Dieppe, the only Town in Normandy in the Hands of the French, 335. besieged by the E.

I N D E X.

E. of Shrewsbury, 358. the Blockade raised by Prince Lewis, 362
Dorset (E. of) makes an Incursion into Normandy, 140. created D. of Exeter, 148. a Pension of 1000l. granted him, ibid.
Dowglas (Earl) defeated and taken Prisoner, 38. his Valour at the Battle of Shrewsbury, 46. n. commands an Aid sent to Charles VII, 237. created D. of Touraine, ibid. commands the French Army, 243. slain at the Battle of Verneuil, 246
Dunbar (George) E. of March goes over to the K. of England, 27
Dutchy-Court of the House of Lancaster by whom instituted, 87, n.

E

Eaton-College by whom founded, 389, n.
Eden (Alexander) kills Jack Cade, 393
Edinburgh besieged by the English, 28
Edmund Beaufort, 333
St. Edmundbury. Parliament there, 371
Edward (Prince) Henry Vth's Son born, 347
Edward Son to the D. of York, afterwards EDWARD IV, born, 361. See E. of March.
England. Account of the Situation of Affairs in that Kingdom upon the Death of K. Henry V, 211, &c.

English defeated at the Battle of Gravelle, 236. and of Montargis, 265. takes Jenville, Mehun, Baugenay, Gergeau, Clery, Sully, 277. Montargis, 302. defeated near Orleans, 283. raise the Siege of that Town, 284. defeated at the Battle of Patay, 286. murmur upon the Turn of Affairs in France, 295, throw all the blame on the D. of Gloucester, 296. find fault that the French Prisoners had not been released, ibid. take la Hire, 309. their Affairs decline after the Treaty of Arras, 319. desire a Peace, 323. take Acs and St. Sever, 357. defeated at the Battle of Fourmigni, 334 Eugenius II. Pope, sends Ambassadors to persuade the King's of England and France to a Peace, 304, 336. absolves the D. of Burgundy from his Oath to the K. of England, 316, 317.
Exeter (D. of) made Governor of Calais, 9. enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV, 19. taken and executed, 25
 — (D. of) takes Dieppe and Montervil, 165. block'd up in Paris, and relieved by K. Henry V, 193. appointed Governor to K. Henry VI, 227 E.

I N D E X.

Falconbridge (Lord) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV, 54. beheaded, 57.
 — (Lord) left Gouverneur of Calis, 366. sent to sound the Instructions of the Inhabitants of Kent, 370. takes Sir Simon Montfort Prisoner, and sends him to Calais, ibid.
 Falstaff, a famous Commander of the English Army in France, 276. defeats the French at the Battle of Herrings, 280
 Famine in England and France, 332
 Flanders, several Towns there revolt against the D. of Burgundy, 325 Fols (E. of) an Account of him, 116. sends Charles VII. a Body of Troops, 268. retakes St. Sever from the English, 357. takes Maulcon, 386
 Fougères surprized by Surienne, 381
 Fournigni (Battle of) 334
 France, does not keep the Truce with England, 53. Truces between England and France. See Truces. Affairs of France, 94, &c. sends Embassadors to London, 98. the War against that Kingdom resolved by K. Henry V, 114. bribes some Persons to kill him, 118. sends the Archbishop of Rheims, and others, Ambassadors to K. Henry, 145. state of the Court of France, 149. their demands of K. Henry, 170. divided between two Factions, 186. Account of the Situation of Affairs in that Kingdom, upon the Death of K. Henry V, 212. &c. France (K. of.) See Charles Lewis, &c.

States of France confirm the Peace with K. Henry V. 184, 185. French make a Descent in the Isle of Wight, 39. land in Wales, 58. try to assist Glendour, but in vain, 64. take several Towns in Guienne, 65. their Offers to K. Henry V, 106. draw together an Army to oppose him, 121. defeated at the Battle of Azincourt, 131. &c. send Deputies to congratulate him upon his Accession to the Crown, 210. defeated at the Battle of Crevant, 233. and Verneuil 246. take Beaumont, Charité Ivry, 242, 243. Chartres, 302. Lagni, 308. Dreux, and Chevreuse, 328. Evreux, Pontoile, 352. Normandy and Guienne, 395, 396. plunder Sandwich and Fowye, 360

French Lords swear Allegiance to K. Henry VI, 210

G

GAM, his brave Saying to K. Henry V, 125
 Gascons revolt against K. Henry IV, 17. make a Truce with Henry V, 160. are pardoned, 187. offer to return to the K. of England, 343 de Giac first Minister to the K. of France

France in the room of Louvet, 258. does not send Money to the Constable as he had promised, 263. strangled by the Constable's Order, 264.
Glendour (Owen) excites the Welsh to a revolt, 29. takes the E. of March Prisoner, 30. ravages the Counties bordering upon Wales, 34. retires to Snowdon-Hill, 37. enters into a Conspiracy with the E. of Northumberland, &c. 43. makes himself Master of some Places on the West of the Severn, 50. takes Carmarthen, Worcester, &c. 58. the Welsh begin to desert him, 71.
Glocester (E. of) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV, 19. executed, 25.
 — (D. of,) 168. left Regent of the K., 196. K. Henry V. desires he should be Protector of the Realm during his Son's Minority, 198. President of the Council, 208. his Character, 222. is made Protector, 226. jealousy between the Bishop of Winchester and him, 228. falls out with the D. of Brabant, 248. marries Jaquelina of Hainault, 249. asserts his Pretensions to the Dukedom of Brabant, 249. becomes Master of Hainault, 250. challenged by the D. of Burgundy, 252. quarrel between him and the Bishop of Winchester, 259. ac-
 Vol. V.

causes the Bishop, 261. leaves Jaquelina, and marries Eleanor of Cobham, 274. gives the Bishop of Winchester a great Mortification, 288. made first Counsellor to the King, 292. attempts to deprive the Bishop of Winchester of his Bishoprick, 303. causes his Baggage to be seized, 306. relieves Calais, 325. over-runs Artois, Flanders and Hainault, 326. is against the D. of Orleans being released, 342. his Prosecution against it, 343. impeaches the Cardinal of Winchester of High Treason, 358, 359. his Enemies prejudice the K. against him, 360. opposes the Alliance between the K. and Margaret of Anjou, 368. a League formed against him, 369. his ruin contrived and determined, 370. 371. is apprehended, ibid. and found dead in his Bed, 373. his Domesticks condemned, ibid. where buried, 374.
Glocester (Duchess of) accused of Witchcraft and Treason, 352. condemned to do Penance, and to perpetual Imprisonment, 353.
Gold by whom first coined in England, 389.
Guienne. K. Charles marches towards it, 354. becomes Master of it, 355, 336, 346.
 H.
Hainault (Affairs of,) 248, 251, 267, 272. the D.
 Q. q. q. of

I N D E X.

of Gloucester becomes Master of Halidown-Hill (Battle of), 38
Harfleur taken by K. Henry V, 1418. taken by the French,
310. taken by Talbot, 335.
by the E. of Longueville, 385 Hattings (Lord) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV,
154. beheaded, 157
Henry IV. continues the Parliament that was under Richard II, 1. fills the vacant Posts, 3. crowned and anointed, ib. publishes a Proclamation to show his Title to the Crown, 5. creates his Son Henry D. of Cornwall Prince of Wales, &c. 6. grants a General Pardon, 9. asks the Parliament what is to be done with K. Richard, 9. assures the Clergy of his Protection, and promises to extirpate Heresy, 15.
his Proposals to the Court of France, 152. attempts to make himself popular, 18. and burns
K. Richard's Regiments, ibid.
Conspiracies against him, 29.
1418 54. 61. marches into Scotland, 28. besieges Edin- burgh, ibid. retires, ib. demands Isabella for his Son, 33.
marches against the Welsh, 34.
37. 59. a Plot against him,
35. Papers full of invectives cast against him, ibid. Marries Joanna of Navarre, 36. complains of a Challenge sent him by the D. of Orleans, 41. falls

out with the E. of Northumberland, 41, &c. defeats the Male-Contents at the Battle of Shrewsbury, 45. takes all possible Care to secure the Fidelity of the Northern Counties, 46.
summons the E. of Northumberland, to appear before him, ibid. is denied Money by the Nobles and Clergy 54. causes several Lords that had conspired against him to be beheaded, 57.
keeps the Parliament assembled till they grant him Money, 60. carries on a secret Negotiation in England to have the E. of Northumberland delivered to him, 62. is like to be taken by Pirates, 65. goes to York, and punishes those that had rebelled against him, 68. orders a Fleet to be fitted out against the French Rebels, 68. orders by a Proclamation all his Subjects to acknowledge Alexander V. for Pope, 70. begins to break upon the Parliament's Privileges, 71. demand a Subsidy, 72.
rejects three Petitions presented by the House of Commons against the Clergy, 72, 73. obtains a Subsidy by a kind of Force, 74.
forms a Design of marrying the Prince of Wales with one of the D. of Burgundy's Daughters, 76. sends the D. of Burgundy a considerable Number of Troops, 77. Treaty between him and the Orleans Faction, 79. en- joys gives a profound Peace, and affects Popularity, 81. is seized with a dangerous Distemper, 83. takes the Cross to go to Jerusalem, 84. always kept his Crown on his Pillow, ibid. his last Instructions to his Son, 84. dies, 85. his Character, ibid. his Issue, 87 Henry V. his Character, 89. created Prince of Wales, D. of Cornwall, E. of Chester, 6. defeats the Welsh twice, 33. is present at the burning of a Lollard, 74. his Extravagancies, 82. the cause of it, 80. gives a Judge a Blow on the Face, for which he is imprisoned, ibid. the K. grows suspicious of him, ibid. vindicates himself, 83. is proclaimed K. 90. and crowned, 91. dismisses his old Companions, ibid. promises the Clergy to prosecute the Lollards, 92. removes K. Richard's Body to Westminster, ibid. orders Sir John Oldcastle to be apprehended and committed to the Tower, 93. issues a Proclamation forbidding the Lollards to hold any Meetings, ibid. sends Embassadors to Paris, 97. 104. is told that Sir John Oldcastle was at the Head of 20,000 Lollards, 101. goes and attacks them, ibid. demands the re-establishment of the Treaty of Bretigny, 104. resolves upon the War with V O L. V.

France, 108. 114. calls a Parliament at Leicester, 109. embarks his Troops for France, 118. a Plot against him, 118. sets Sail, 120. lands at Harfleur, which he takes and populates with English, ibid. attempts to retire to Calais, 121. the ill State of his Army, ibid. passes the Somme, 124. defeats the French at the Battle of Azincourt, 124—133. kills his Prisoners, and why, 132. marches to Calais, and returns to England, 134. all Parties in France, seek his Alliance, 136. tries to get the D. of Burgundy to his Side, 137. Negotiations between them, 141. agree upon an Interim at Calais, 142. goes to Calais, 145. the D. does him Homage, 144. pawns his Crown, Jewels, &c. 148. prepares to renew the War with France, ibid. his way of raising an Army, ibid. sets Sail for France, and lands at Tonque, which he takes, 154. as also Caen, Bayeux, Alençon, &c. 154, 155. Falaise, 156. Cherbourg, 158. Roan, 164. Pontile, 173. Sens, 181. Melun, 184. Dreux, 193. the Gascons make a Truce with him, 160. his Instructions to his Ambassadors, 162. has an Interview with the K. of France, 168. his Demands at the Conference of Meulant
 Q q q 2

I N D E X

Meulant, 169. grants the Parisians a Truce, 175. claims the Crown of France, 176. the Preliminary Article he proposed for a Peace, ibid. Treaty between him and the D. of Burgundy, 178. coins a new sort of Money, and takes the Title of K. of France, 179. betrotheth the Princess Catharine, 179. married to her, 183. makes his Entry into Paris, 184. returns to England, 187. calls a Parliament and takes a Progress into several Counties, 188. issues out a Proclamation against the Pope's Provisions, ibid. lays before the Parliament a State of the Revenues and Charges of the Crown, 189. returns to Paris, 193. marches against the Dauphin, ibid. returns to Paris, 194. projects Matches for his Brothers, 195. coins a new Money in France, 196. falls sick, 197. goes to Vincennes, ibid. his dying Speech, ibid. his Firmness at the Approach of Death, 198. declares he designed to go to Jerusalem, ibid. dies, ibid. his Character, 199. &c. his Issue, 206. his Statue, 198, n. Henry (afterwards Henry VI.) Prince born. 194. proclaimed K. of England, and Heir of France, 208. proclaimed K. of France at Paris, 209. his Possessions in France, 213.

crowned at London, 292. goes to France and is crown'd at Paris, 297. returns to England, 304. bestows the Earldom of Bulloin upon the Lord Beaumont and Flanders, upon the D. of Gloucester, 325. his Character, 341. Conventions between him and the D. of Bretagne, 348. the E. of Armagnac offers him his Daughter, 357. the March put by, 364. of a narrow Genius, 361. is set on against the D. of Gloucester, ibid. a Marriage proposed between him and Margaret of Anjou, 366. solemnized by Proxy at Tours, 369. he makes new Creations, 368. minds nothing but his Devotions, 377. some have made him a Saint, ibid. sends the D. of Suffolk to the Tower, 389. marches against Jack Cade, 392. returns to London, ibid. retires to Kenilworth-Castle, ib. sends Orders to the Sheriffs of Wales, &c. to hinder the D. of York's Landing from Ireland, 337. sends the D. of York a mild Answer, 339. goes out to meet him, 340. sends to the Bishops to him to know why he had taken Arms, 341. seized with a dangerous fit of Sickness, 347. his Son Edward born, ibid. resumes his Authority, 353. takes from the D. of York the Government of Calais, and makes himself

- himself Governor, 354. his Army defeated at the first Battle of St. Albans, 355. falls into the Hands of the D. of York, 356. is conducted to St. Albans, ibid. dismisses the D. of York from his Protectorship, 358. carried by the Queen to Coventry, 359. little esteemed by his Subjects, 361. desires the D. of York and his Friends to repair to London, 362. his Troops defeated by the E. of Salisbury, 365. marches against the D. of York, 366, &c. issues out a Proclamation offering the Adult-Connours Pardon, 367. defeated at Northampton, 372. and taken Prisoner, 373. conducted to London, ibid. acknowledges the D. of York and his Adherents for good Subjects, 374. it is decreed that he should enjoy the Crown during Life, 377. orders the Queen to repair to him, 376. freed by her, 384. the End of his Reign, 387. his Character, ib. causes of the decay of the English Affairs in this Reign, 388.
- Hapborne (Sir Patrick) General of the Scots, slain, 28. his Son slain, 37
- Heralds, an Account of them, 290, n.
- Hereticks, Statute against them, 32. when first burnt in England, 33
- Herrings (Battle of,) 279
- Holland (John) E. of Huntingdon, created D. of Exeter, 368
- Hotspur (Henry) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV, 43. is slain, 45
- Humphrey. See D. of Gloucester.
- Humphrey E. of Stafford, created D. of Buckingham, 368
- J.
- James Prince of Scotland, (afterwards James I.) seized and confined to the Tower of London, 64. 190. is set at Liberty, 192. goes along with K. Henry V. to France, 193. is set at Liberty, 240. marries Joanna of Somerset, ibid. murdered in his Bed, 327
- James II. K. of Scotland, 327. besieges Roxborough, 374. killed, ibid.
- James III. K. of Scotland, ibid.
- Jaqueline of Hainault stood God-mother to Prince Henry, afterwards Henry VI. 194. an Account of her, ibid. married to the D. of Brabant, 249. brought by some English Knights to London, ibid. married to the D. of Gloucester, ib. comes to Hainault, 250. delivered up to the D. of Burgundy, 267. escapes, and retires to Holland, 268
- Jaqueline of Luxemburg married to the D. of Bedford, 310. marries again to Sir Richard Woodville, 327

I N D E X.

Innocent VII, made Pope, 52 Interview between the Dukes of Bedford, Burgundy, Bretagne, and E. of Richmond, 230
 Joanna of Navarre married to K.
 Henry IV, 36. arrives in England, and is crown'd, 39.
dies, 326
 Joan of Arc, a large Account of her, 281, &c. A Dissertation upon her, 390, &c. marches with a Convoy to Orleans, 283.
takes four of the English Forts, ibid. is for retiring after the King's Coronation at Rheims, 288. wounded at a skirmish near Paris, 294. goes to re- lieve Compiègne, 298. makes a Sally, and is taken Prisoner, ibid. delivered to the D. of Bed- ford, 299. condemned to per- petual Imprisonment, and afterwards to be burnt, 301 Ireland. A Rebellion there, quel- led by the D. of York, 386 Isabella, Widow of K. Richard II. demanded by the D. of Orleans, Berry, &c., 33. is sent back, ibid. the French demand her Portion, 39, 41 Isabella Queen of France, sent a- way Prisoner to Tours, 153.
her great hatred to the Dauphin her Son, ibid. joins with the D. of Burgundy, 155. is by him carried off to Troye, ibid.
styles herself Regent, ibid. en- ters Paris, 159. dies, 319
 Ivry taken by the French, 243.

retaken by the English, 244
 K Kemp (John) Archbishop of York, devoted to the Cardidinal of Winchester, 361.
made Archbishop of Centerbu-ry, dies, 347. builds the Di- vinity-School at Oxford, and Paul's Cross, 389. n.
 Kent, A Sedition there, 389. In- habitants of that County side with the D. of York, &c., 396. in- vade over the E. of Warwick and the rest of the Yorkists, 370
 — (E. of) commands a Fleet a- gainst the French Pyrates, 68. is slain, ibid.
 Kings at Arms, an Account of them, 290. n.
 King's College, by whom founded,
 289. n.
 Kiriell (Sir Thomas) commands
a Supply of English Troops, 324. marches towards Caen, ib. de- feated at the Battle of Fourmig-ni, ibid. beheaded, 384 Knolls (Sir Robert) curbs the Gascons, 17. dies, 65
 L Lagni taken by the French, 308 Lancaster (House of) Succession of the Crown settled upon it, 19.
 Wars between the Houses of Lan- caster and York, 347.
 — (Thomas of) made High Steu- ard, 33
 Legates (the Pope's) sent into France to make an Agreement between

I N D E X.

between the Factions there, 158 Lelingham, Negotiations there between the Courts of England and France, 16, 38, 41, 98
 Lewis the Dauphin, born 237.
 marries Margaret of Scotland, 326. takes the Castle of Mon-tereau, 331. joins in a League against the K. his Father, 349, raises the Blockade of Dieppe, 362. his Father suspicious of him, ibid. drives the E. of Armagnac out of his Territories, 363. takes him Prisoner by Treachery, 364. becomes Master of Rouergne, ibid. made K. of France, 274
 L'Isle-Adam takes Paris, 322. torn to pieces by the Populace of Bruges, 326.
 Lollards daily increased, 15. when first burnt in England, 33. make a great Progress, at which the Clergy is alarm'd, 70. the Commons present a Petition in favour of them, 73. one burnt, 74.
 K. Henry V. promises the Clergy to persecute them. 92. continue their Meetings notwithstanding the Proclamation, 101
 persecuted, 102
 London shuts its Gates against the D. of York, 340. a Sedition
 there, 358
 Londoners, Quarrel between them and some of Jack Cade's Soldiers, 333
 Lorrain (War of) 302
 Lovelace (Lord) cause of the D.

of Warwick's Defeat, 384 Louvet, his Character, 220. is removed from the Court of France by the Constable's Means, 258.

M.

Macon taken by the English, 233
 Main conquered by the E. of Salisbury, 248. delivered up to Charles of Anjou, 380 Man (Isle of) granted to the E. of Northumberland, 3. taken from him. 46
 Manuel Palæologus. See Constantinople.
 March (E. of) See Mortimer, Dunbar, &c.
 ----- (E. of), the D. of York's eldest Son, flies to Calais, 368. goes to meet the Queen, with a Design to give her Battle, 371.
 defeats the King's Army at Northampton, 372. resolves to revenge the Death of his Father, 383. defeats the E. of Pembroke, ibid. enters London, 385. his Friends resolve to place him on the Throne, ibid.
 his extraordinary Election, 386.
 the Crown adjudged to him, ib.
 proclaimed K. under the Name of EDWARD IV. 387
 Margaret of Anjou: A marriage proposed between her and K.
 Henry VI. 366. which is solemnized at Tours, 369. comes to England, and is crowned, ibid. stirs up the Cardinal of Win-

I N D E X.

- Winchester and Marquess of Suffolk to destroy the D. of Gloucester. 371. which draws upon her a publick Odium, 374. everywhere hated, 377. tries in vain to adjourn a Parliament at Leicester, 387. gets it adjourned there, 389. sends the D. of Somerset 1500 Men, 394. brought to Bed of a Son, 347. tries to disappoint the D. of York's Designs, 357. takes the K. to Coventry, 359. tries to intrap the D. of York, &c. ib. outwardly reconciled to him, 361. tries in vain to prevent the Admittance of the Male-contents in London, 371. assembles her Troops, and marches towards London, ibid. defeated at Northampton, 372. flies to Durham, 373. retires into Wales, ibid. takes refuge in Scotland, ibid. draws together an Army in the North, 379. defeats the D. of York at Wakefield, 380. marches against the E. of March, 383. defeats the E. of Warwick, 384. frees the K. ibid. her Troops plunder St. Albans, ibid. demands Provisions of the Mayor of London, ibid. retires into the North of England, 385
Martin V. (Pope) tries to unite the two Factions in France, 158. annuls the Marriage of Jaqueline with the D. of Gloucester, 273
Mary, Queen of France, her Character, 220 Massacre of Paris, 159
Maudlin set up for K. Richard, 20. taken and hanged, 25
Meaux besieged, 194. and taken, 195, 333
Merks (Thomas) : See Bishop of Carlisle,
Meulant, a Conference there, 168. taken by the French, 228. retaken by the English, 229.
Milan (D. of) sends Charles VII. an Aid, 235
Montargis (Battle of) 266. taken by the English, 302. by the French, 309. delivered up to the French, 332
Montmorency (Marshal de) lands in Wales, 58
Morgan (Philip) sent by K. Henry V. Ambassador into France, 141
Mortimer (Edmund) E. of March, retires to Wigmore, 2. taken Prisoner by Glendour, 30. joins in a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV. 43. discovers a Conspiracy against K. Henry V. 119. made Gouverneur of Ireland, 238. dies, 250 — His Children confined at Windsor, 52. carried away from thence, ibid.
Mortimer (Sir John) accused of designing to cause an Insurrection in Wales, 250. is executed, ibid.
Mowbray (Thomas) enters in- 16

I N D E X.

See a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV. 34. beheaded, 57
 ——— (John) E. Marshal, restored to the Title of D. of Norfolk, 282. flies with the D. of York, 338.

N.

N Arbonne (Viscount of) forces E. Douglas to fight against the English, 246. killed, 247. his Body hung on a Gibbet, ibid.

Nevil (Ralph) E. of Westmoreland made E. Marshal, 3. seizes by Fraud the Heads of a Conspiracy against K. Henry EV. 56

——— (Richard.) See E. of Salisbury.

New-College, by whom founded, 87

Nisbet; the Scots defeated there, 37

Norfolk (D. of.) See Mowbray.

Normandy, an Insurrection there, 309. the French driven out thence, 324. all conquered by Charles VII. 395

Northampton (Battle of) 372

Northumberland (E. of.) See Percy.

——— (E. of) Hotspur's Son, slain at the first Battle of St.
 Albans, 155

O.

O Leastles (Sir John) the Clergy resolve to prosecute him, 92. is apprehended, committed to the Tower, and condemised, 93. escapes, ib. burnt for Heresy, 157

Orisland, 107

Orleans besieged by the English, 277. the Siege of it raised, 284

——— (D. of) challenges K.
 Henry IV. 40. besieges Bourg and Playe, 53, 85. murdered, 68

——— (Duchess of) demands
 Justice for the Death of her Husband, 75. dies for Grief, 76.

Orleans (D. of) an Account of him, 218. offers to mediate a Peace with France, 311. but endeavours only to impose upon the English, 313. sets on foot a new Negotiation between the Kings of England and France,
 331. procures his Liberty, 341,
 347. and upon what Terms,
 346. enters into a League against K. Charles, 353

Orleans (Bastard of) gets a Convoy into Orleans, 308. stops the Progress of the English, 342. created E. of Dunois, 358.
 and E. of Longueville, 384

Orleans-Faction, 77. apply to K.
 Henry IV. for aid, 78 come near Paris, 97

Orleans (Maid of.) See Joan of Arc.

Orsay, taken by the English, 232

Owen Glendour: See Glendour.

Oxford Library; by whom first founded, 375 n.

——— the Divinity School there, R. 1 f by

by whom built, 389. n.
Oxford (Countess of) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV. 48

P.

Pardon, a general one granted by K. Henry IV. 19

Paris (Massacre of) 159

Parisians make an Agreement with K. Henry V. 175. obtain a Truce, ibid.

Parliament continued by K. Henry
IV. 2. the cruel Parliament, 14. the illiterate, 50. one at Leicester, 109, 188. at St.
Edmundsbury, 371

Parliament confirms the Peace of Troye, 189. presents the King a Petition, ibid. denies K. Henry IV. Money, 60. condemns the Queen's and D. of Somerset's Management, 356

Parliaments did not use to be so frequently prorogued as they are now, 15

Parliament (Acts of) 7, 9, 60.
See Acts.

Paray (Battle of) 286, 287.

Paul's Cross, by whom built, 389 n.

St. Paul (E. of.) See Valeran.

Pembroke (E. of.) See Jasper Tudor.

Percy (Henry) E. of Northumberland made High-Constable, 3. hath a Grant of the Isle of Man, ibid. defeats the Scots, 28, 37. falls out with K. Henry, and forms a Project of dethroning him, 41. &c. presses

the King to redeem Mortimer, 43. is pardoned by the King, 46.
enters into a Conspiracy against him, 54. flies to Berwick, 57.
retires to Scotland, 58. and to Wales, 62. enters into a fresh Conspiracy against K. Henry,
66. defeated and slain, 68

Pisa (Council of) 70

Plague at London, 64. in England, 332.

Plimouth (Inhabitants of) fit out a Fleet, and ravage some Parts of Bretagne, 48

Pole (John de la) burns the Suburbs of Angers, 236. defeated at the Battle of Gravelle, ibid.
by whom introduced to Court, 361. appointed Head of an Embassy to France, 365. begs to be secured against all After-reckonings, 366. proposes a Marriage between K. Henry VI.
and Margaret of Anjou, ibid.
promises upon Consideration of that Match to deliver Maine to Charles of Anjou, 368. returns to England, ibid. created Marquis of Suffolk, ibid. the Parliament returns him publick Thanks, 370. contrives the Ruin of the D. of Gloucester. ib.
the People murmur against him, 376 justifies himself before the King, ibid. and obtains a Discharge, ibid. universally hated, 377. made D. of Suffolk 379.
complaints of the People against him, 386. impeached by the House

I N D E X.

House of Commons, 388. sent to the Tower, 389. released, ibid. banished for five Years, 390. taken in his Passage to France, and beheaded, ibid. where buried, ibid. n.

— (his Dutcheſs) Chaucer's Daughter, where buried, ib. n.

Pontoile taken by the English, 328. by the French, 350, 352

Pontorſon beſieged and taken, 268, 271

Pope: See Martin, Innocent, Eugenius.

Printing, when firſt found out, 389. n. when and by whom brought to England, ibid.

Proviſions of the Popes; a Proclamation iſſued out againſt them, 388

Pyers (Sir Thomas) murders K. Richard II. 25

Q

Queen's College, Cambridge, by whom founded, 389. n.

R

Atcliffe (Sir John) commands a Body of English Troops in France, 290

RICHARD (King), his Advifers and Favourites inquired after, 8. the extraordinary Sentence that was paſſed upon him, 13. his tragical Death, 25. Rumours ſpread of his being alive, 35, 44, 48, 64. his Body removed to Weſtminſter, 92.

Richmond (E. of) Account of the State of his Affairs upon the Death of K. Henry V. 214 marries Margaret, eldeſt Siſter of the D. of Burgundy, 230.

Vol. V.

deſires to command the English Army, 238. the Command of the French Army committed to him, 254. is made Conſtable of France, and upon what Conditions, ibid. retires from Court, but ſoon returns, 258. levies an Army, and takes Pontorſon, 262, 263. beſieges St. James de Beuvron, where he is defeated, 363. cauſes de Giac to be ſtrangled, and the Camus de Beaulieu to be aſſaſſinated, 264.

the King is highly incenſed againſt him, ibid. withdraws in a Diſguſt, 268. brings the King a Body of Troops, 284. takes Evreux, and threatens all Normandy, 293. cauſes la Trimouille to be impriſoned, 308. makes a ſeparate Peace with the D. of Burgundy, 314. takes Paris, 322. and Meaux, 383. beſieges Avranches, 335

Roan beſieged, 161. and taken 164. retaken by the French, 385

Robert III. K. of Scotland, ſends his ſecond Son to the Court of France, to be educated there, 63. dies, 64

Rochester-Bridge, by whom built, 65

Rokesby (Sir Thomas) raiſes Troops againſt the E. of Northumberland, and defeats him, &c. 67.

Rose, White and Red, Diſtinctions R r r 2 of

I N D E X.

of the Houses of Lancaster and York, 347

Roxborough taken by the Scots, 374

Rue taken by the French, 315

Salisbury (E. of) imprisoned, 9. enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV. 19. beheaded, 24

—— (E. of) besieges Montagu, and takes it, 231, 233. takes Vertus, Sezanne, Epernay, &c. ibid. Crevant, 232. conquers Maine, 248, goes into France with an Army, 276. marches towards the Loire, and resolves to besiege Orleans, 277. causes 60 Forts to be built round it, ibid. slain, 279

—— (E. of) i. e. Nevil sides with the D. of York, 339. his Character, 350. admitted into the Council, 351. the great Seal given to him, 352. admitted into the Council, 363. withdraws to York, ibid. marches to London with an Army, 365. defeats the King's Troops, ibid. joins the D. of York, 366. deserted by his Troops, flies to Calais, 367, 368. publishes a Manifesto, 370. arrives at Sandwich, and is let into London, 371. taken Prisoner at the Battle of Wakefield, and beheaded, 382

Salutes, 190. n.
Sandwich plundered by the French, 360

Sawtre (William) the first that was burnt in England for Heresy, 33.

Say (Lord) High-Treasurer, beheaded by Jack Cade, 392

Scales (Lord) sent by the Queen to hinder the Malecontents from being admitted into London, 371. shuts himself in the Tower, ibid. orders the Tower-Cannon to play against the City, ib.

Schism upon accounts of the Popes, 69.

Scotland, cause of the War between that Kingdom and England, 27. Affairs of Scotland, 63, 191. the English ravage several Parts of it, 75. falls out with England, 333

—— (K. of.) See James, Stuart.

Scots take Werk Castle, 17. invade England, 28. 37. send Charles VII. an Aid, 237. invade the Northern Counties of England, 360

Scroop (Henry) Lord Treasurer, enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry V. 118. beheaded, 119

Scroop (Richard.) See Archbishop of York.

Serlo reports that K. Richard is alive, 48. hang'd, 49.

Sheriffs, take the Liberty of returning such Representatives as had not a Majority of Votes, 71.

Shrewsbury-Parliament, the Proceedings of it repealed, 7 Shrews-

I N D E X.

- Shrewsbury Fight, 43
Shrewsbury (E. of.) See Talbot.
 ----- (E. of.) his Son, slain at the Battle of Northampton, 373 Sicily (K. of.) declares against the D. of Burgundy, 99. possesses the Dauphin, 143. dies, ibid.
 ----- (K. of.) i. e. D. of Anjou, an Account of him, 216. joins the K. of France, 287
 ----- (Q. of.) See Violante.
Sigismund (Emperor) comes to Paris, 138. to England, 139. gets the Kings of England and France to consent to a Truce, ib. signs a Treaty of perpetual Alliance with K. Henry V. 144. installed Knight of the Garter, 145 n.
Snowdon-hill, Glendour retires thither, 37
Somerset (D. of) viz. John, dies, 379
 ----- (D. of) Edmund, ravages part of Normandy, 363. made Regent of France, 379. surrenders Rouen to the French, 385. comes to England, 395. is sent to the Tower, and his Palace is plundered, 395. released and made Prime Minister, ib. the D. of York comes and accuses him, 342. sent to the Tower, 352. the Government of Calais is taken from him, ibid. released, 353. slain at the first Battle of St. Albans, 355
 ----- (D. of) 361. goes to take Possession of his Government of Calais, 368. repulsed by the Garrison, ibid. the Queen sends him Supplies, which are by the E. of Warwick carried to Calais, 369. made Commander of the Queen's Forces, 371. flies to Durham, 373
Stafford (Lord) killed at the first Battle of St. Albans, 355
 ----- (John), made Archbishop of Canterbury, 369 Statutes relating to the Church, 30. against Provisors, renewed, 31. of Præmunire, ibid. against Hereticks, 32. against the Lollards, 109
Stuart (Robert) King of Scotland, 27. sends Ambassadors to demand the E. of March, and proclaims War against England, 28
 ----- (Mordec) Regent of Scotland, 139 Subsidies granted to K. Henry IV. 72. one that was not to be recorded, 48
 ----- granted to K. Henry V. 114, 148, 189
 ----- to K. Henry VI, 239. 370
Suffolk (E. of) surprized in Mans, 267. takes Laval, 268. made Prisoner in Gergeau, 285
 ----- (E. of.) See John de la Pole.
Surienne surprizes Fougères, 381
Surrey (D. of) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV. 19.

I N D E X.

19. beheaded, 24
Sword-Lancaster, 23

T Albot relieves the D. of Suffolk, and drives the French out of Mans, 268. takes Laval, ibid. taken Prisoner, 287. exchanged for Xaintrailles, 305. arrives in France, and takes several places, 315. takes Pontoise, 328. relieves Crotoy, 329. takes Tancarville, 330. throws Succours into Meaux, 334. relieves Avranches, ibid. takes Harfleur, 335. throws Succours into Pontoise, 350. sent to France with an Army, 357. created E. of Shrewsbury, ibid. takes the Castle of Conches, and other Places, 358. goes to England for Reinforcements left in Hostage for the Payment of 50,000 Crowns of Gold to the K. of France, 385. released, 386. sent into France to reduce Guienne, 344. retakes several Places, ibid. goes and attacks the French Army, 345. defeated and slain, 346

— (Sir John) is slain, ibid.

— See E. of Shrewsbury.

Tannegui du Chatel his Character, 225. attempts to relieve Montaigu, 231. sent to make the E. of Richmond an offer of being Constable of France, 254. asks K. Charles leave to retire from Court, 257

Tartas besieged by the English, 354. relieved by K. Charles, 357.

Tax raised by Henry IV. for the Marriage Dowry of his Daughter, 35

Touloucon made Prisoner by Treachery, 236. exchanged for Stuart, ibid.

Tours, the Kings of England and France treat there about a Truce, 365

Treason, to what confined, 8

Treaty of Troye, 179, &c.

Trimouille (la) great Favourite of Charles VII. 270. an attempt upon his Life, ibid. a Civil War upon his Account, ibid. is seized and committed to Prison, 308. defeats a Confederacy against K. Charles VII, 349

Troye (Treaty of) 179, &c.

Truces between England and France, 98. 147. confirmed, 27, 39. prolonged, 75, 117, 178, 369, 370, 375, 381. one at Tours, 366. for Poitou and Guienne, 69

— between England and Scotland, 28, 49, 241, 300, 333, 366, 385, 361

— between England and Castile, 300

— between England and Bretagne, 66. prolonged, 71, 75

— between England and Burgundy, 362. prolonged, 375

— the D. of Gloucester and Brabant, 253

— 66

-----between K. Charles and the D. of Burgundy, 238
 Tudor (Owen) marries Queen
 Catharine, Widow of Henry V, 326. is sent to the Tower after her Death, ibid. his Issue, 327. from him was descended Henry VII, ibid.
 -----(Edmund) created E. of Richmond, 327. marries Margaret the D. of Somerset's Daughter, ibid.
 -----(Jasper) created E. of Pembroke, 327. defeated by the E. of March, 383
 -----(Owen) beheaded, 327;
 383
 -----V.

Valerian, E. of St. Paul, makes a descent in the Isle of Wight, 39. attempts to seize the Castle of Merck, 53.
 besieges Branc, 253. succeeds his Brother in the Dukedom of Brabant, 273
 Valery taken by the English, 228 Vendôme (E. of) an Account of him, 219
 Verneuil surrenders to the French,
 244. retaken by the English, 246 Verneuil (Battle of,) 244
 Violante Queen of Sicily, her Character, 220
 Visconti. See D. of Milan.
 Viscount, who was the first in England, 373. n.

W.

Wakefield (Battle of,) 381 Wars between the Houses of York and Lancaster, 335, &c.
 Warwick (E. of.) See Beauchamp.
 -----Henry de Beauchamp created E. of Warwick, 365. contests between him and the D. of Buckingham about Precedency, ib. n.
 Warwick (E. of) viz. Nevil, his Character, 350. admitted into the Council, 351. defeats the King's Troops at the first Battle of St. Albans, 355. goes to Calais, 360. admitted into the Council, 362. withdraws to Calais, ibid. seizes in his Passage upon some foreign Ships, ibid. returns to England to justify what he had done, 364.
 a Quarrel between him and the King's Servants, ibid. is attacked, and narrowly escapes, ib.
 ordered to be seized, ib. takes Measures with his Father, and the D. of York, ibid. returns to Calais, 365. joins the D. of York, 366. deserted by his Troops, flies to Calais, 367, 368. goes to Ireland to consult with the D. of York, 369. defeats the Kings Army at Northampton, 372. goes out to fight the Queen, 383. is defeated, 384
 Welsh revolt under Glendour, 29,
 &c. defeated twice by Prince
 Henry,

I N D E X.

Henry, 53. begin to stir, 208
 Werk-Castle taken by the Scots, 17
 Westmoreland (E. of.) See Nevil.
 Whittington (Richard) an Account of him, 86
 Wickliff's Books condemned, 70
 William of Wickham, an Account of him, 86, n.
 Winchester (Bishop of) stood God-father to Prince Henry, afterwards Henry VI. 194. enters into a Confederacy against the D. of Gloucester, 227. made one of the Governors to K. Henry VI, 227. his Character, ibid. jealousy between the D. of Gloucester and him, 228. quarrel between them, 259, desires the D. of Bedford to come to England, 260. Articles exhibited against him by the D. of Gloucester, 261. is acquitted, 262. the Great Seal taken from him, ibid. the D. of Bedford carries him along with him into France, ib. made Cardinal, 268. styled the Cardinal of England, ibid. the D. of Gloucester gives him a great Mortification, 288. is made the Pope's Legate for Germany, and General of a Crusade against the Bohemians; ibid. petitions leave to publish the Crusade in England, 289. engages to serve some Time in France with the Troops he had raised for the Crusade, 290. receives another Mortification from the D. of Gloucester, 300. comes to England to vindicate himself, 306. his Credit increases with the King, 331. lends him Money, ibid. a General Pardon granted him, 332. accused by the D. of Gloucester, 358. Articles of Impeachment against him, 359. is acquitted, 360. contrives the Ruin of the D. of Gloucester, 370. dies,

375

Woodville (Sir Richard) Commander of the English Forces at Paris, 322. marries Jacqueline of Luxemburgh, the D. of Bedford's Widow, 327

Worcester taken by Glendour, 58
 ——— (E. of) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV, 43. taken and beheaded, 46

X.

Xaintrailles taken Prisoner at the Battle of Crevant, 233. ransomed by the K. of France, 234. takes Ham and Guise, ibid. led into an Ambush by a Shepherd, and made Prisoner, 299. made Prisoner another Time, 302

Y.

York Wars between the Houses of York and Lancaster, 377, &c.

York (D. of) i. e. Edmund goes to acquaint K. Henry IV, of a Conspiracy against him, 21. dies, 35

----- (D).

— (D. of) i. e. Edward suspected of having carried away from Windsor Mortimer's Children, 53. is confined to Penvenley-Castle, ibid. killed at the Battle of Azincourt, 139.

— (D. of) i. e. Richard, succeeds Edmund Mortimer in the Title of Earl of March, 250. is made a Knight, 262. appointed Regent of France, 321. drives the French out of Normandy, 324. recalled to England, 329. forces K. Charles to raise the Siege of Pontoise, 351. offers him Battle, ibid. made Regent of France for five Years longer, 369. deprived of it, 379. begins to think of asserting his Right to the Crown, 378. suppresses a Rebellion in Ireland, 386. aspires to the Crown, 391. K. Henry VI. sends Orders to the Sheriffs of Wales, &c. to oppose his Landing from Ireland, 337. the D. complains to the K. of this, 338. returns to England, 338. concerts Measures with his Friends, ibid. his principal Adherents, ib. retires into Wales, and sends the K. word to reform the Government, 339. marches towards London with an Army, 340. passes the Thames at Kingston, 341. offers to submit, if Somerset is ordered to Prison, 341. dismisses his Troops, comes to
 VOL. V.

Court; and accuses the D. of Somerset, ib. apprehended, 342. why not put to Death, ibid. set at Liberty, ibid. takes an Oath to the King, and retires to Wigmore, 343. his Right to the Crown, 348. the Difficulties of his Attempt, ibid. his Advantages, 349. engages the Earls of Salisbury and Warwick in his Plot, 350. admitted into the Council, 351. made Protector of the Realm, Defender of the Church, &c., 352. and Gouverneur of Calais, ibid. deprived of this Government, 354. retires into Wales, and raises an Army, ibid. defeats the King's Troops at the first Battle of St. Albans, 355. his great Security and Unconcernedness, 357. dismissed from the Protector's Place, 358. retires from Court, ibid. is like to be intrapped by the Queen, 359. retires to Wigmore, 360. outwardly reconciled to the King, 361. comes to London, 362. admitted into the Council, 363. levies an Army in Wales, 365. deserted by his Troops, flies into Ireland, 368. attainted with his Adherents, ibid. arrives at London, and goes to the Parliament, 374. by which he expected to be asked to seat himself on the Throne, ib. sends them a Memorial to justify his Claims, 375. Instances of his Moderation,
 S I I tion,

I N D E X.

tion, 377. is absolute Master of the Government, 378. marches against the Queen, 379. shuts himself up in Sandale-Castle, ibid. provoked by the Queen to fight, 380. slain, ib. Yorkists, or Adherents of the D. of York: James Butler commissioned to make a strict search	after them, and dispatch them out of the way, 369 York (Archbishop of) enters into a Conspiracy against K. Henry IV, 54. seized by the E. of Westmoreland, and beheaded, 57 ——(Archbishop of) sent to the Council of Basil, 309
--	--

F I N I S.

E R R A T A in Vol. V.

P. 11. could not so be, r. could not be. p. 31. l. 23. Expeſſativa, r. Expectativa. p. 37. l. 8. Bretagnes, r. Bretagne. p. 54. l. 22. Sell, r. feel. p. 60. l. 2. the of King, r. the King of. ib. l. 15. Expedition. r. Expedient. p. 62. l. 7. eldew, r. eldest. p. 63. l. 12. Go, r. Government. p. 72. l. 32. the Hundred, r. a hundred. p. 75. l. 24. his, r. this. p. 94. l. 8. Branch. r. Breach. p. 144. l. 25. Dauphin. r. Dauphiné. p. 195. l. 33. to the, r. to be. p. 196. l. 30. Adherents. r. Adherence, ibid. l. 4. of the note, regunt, r. regnat. p. 206. l. 19. Scence, r. Scene. p. 236. l. 17. Angers, r. Angers. p. 268. l. 11. altogether, r. all together. p. 310. l. 27. Earl of St. Paul. r. daughter to the Earl of St. Paul. p. 322. l. 19. the like. r. the little. p. 323. l. 15. coſt, r. that coſt. p. 324. l. 21. taking, r. taken. p. 333. l. 1. Southward, r. Southwark. p. 337. l. 22. infallible, r. infallibly. p. 361. l. 4. affrentive, r. affronting. p. 389. l. 3. of the note, Canton, r. Caxton.

7

54

31 NOV 2 1914

